Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

A KLAMATH farmer said the other day he had sold everything in his potato cellar but the sprouts, and expected an offer any day on them.

EPLEY

That's indicative of what is happening in the way of a complete clean-up of the 1944 potato crop. There won't be any food waste in that department this year.

Already, 11,500 carloads of 1944 potatoes have been shipped to market. By the end of the shipping season, it appears the total will be around 12,500.

There has been a minor car shortage in the past few days. As soon as more cars are available, shipments will probably pick up considerably over the 10 or a dozen cars that have gone out daily recently. On some days of this season, more than 100 carloads of spuds have gone to market from Klamath basin points.

• • •

Increased Production

LOOKING at this year's record potato figures, we are reminded of the agricultural outlook conferences here a few years ago when we talked of the probability that 5000 carloads would be about the maximum on which to stabilize our potato industry. In recent years, shipments have just about doubled that figure, and this year they will be two and one-half times that.

This has not been due entirely to increased acreage, although acreage this year is at an all-time high. One of the impressive points Klamath interests made at the recent hearing on water diversion was the increased per acre production of potatoes in this valley. They showed that potato production was about 100 bushels per acre 20 years ago, and is now running around 400 bushels to the acre.

All of this, of course, goes to show the remarkable potentialities of our soil and climate, and strengthens the case for maximum agricultural development in the Klamath basin that will eventually make use of all available water.

They've just cut down the stately old trees that surrounded the courthouse down at Yreka, and Bill Bailey, in the Siskiyou News, has written a handsome eulogy to their memory. We hope the News will succeed in saving other trees that line Yreka's streets. They are one of the town's assets.

News Behind the News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, March 5—The straw polls are galluping over the country, heralding or drumming up what is called "an overwhelming majority support" for compulsory military education.

I doubt them. I do not think the proposition has any great support, let alone majority following, and I will tell you why:

It was O. Henry who once wrote that straw votes show only how the hot air is blowing. These polls ask such questions as:

"Are you for military training; should it be universal?"

Nearly everyone is for "military training," and not one in a hundred thousand people in this country realizes that "universal," in this case, is not being used in its dictionary sense, but to cover with diplomatic language, a bold drafting of 17 or 18-year-old youths from their homes and schools, and the surroundings in which they are being raised, for a year of service to the army.

Why do not the polls ask the people what they mean, namely:

"Do you favor a compulsory peacetime draft of the teen-age youths of this country for a year in the army?"

• • •

Equal Deception

AN equally great deception upon the people is being practised by pollers who also ask:

"Do you favor national defense for this country after the war and military training therefor?"

Who is against national defense or training to get it? Not a handful, but that is not the proposition involved.

If all the youths were drafted for a year, you would still have to provide an army and navy for national defense. Such kids could only be a feeder reserve; they could not be either the army or the navy.

As for the "military training" part of it, there are dozens of ways in which this could be accomplished without taking teen-agers away from their homes and schools for a year—including the installation of compulsory training in their home high schools and colleges, enlargement of the National Guard, creating several more West Points and naval academies in the country, on the west coast, Great Lakes, in the (politicians should like this) south.

But are such intelligent questions asked the people? Not in a single polling instance to my knowledge.

You might expect the magazine and newspaper pollers to make such glaring omissions in their gathering of public thought, but now comes an educational group, polling college presidents, and making a somewhat similar mistake in emphasis.

They ask about delaying the proposition until after the war, about types of training, ages, duration under "universal military training," but allow only one-fifth of their space for a few alternatives all of which and more I have suggested from time to time in this spot. They do not seem to realize what the proposition is (they are in good company in this as the chamber of commerce hardly allowed any thought of alternatives to be expressed in its poll.)

I started out against this undemocratic youth-draft (that is its right name) last September, writing that I knew it could not be stopped because it had the support of Mr. Roosevelt, the army and navy, but denouncing it anyway and recommending specific democratic means of obtaining the same objectives.

• • •

Proposition Stopped

NOW I tell you, I believe the proposition has been stopped dead, that it will not get through congress because a strong majority of people are against it—a fact the hot-air polls have not discovered yet, but which is apparent in my mail and news gathering. If they want to ask a cold air question why do they not ask mothers and fathers:

"Do you want your sons or daughters taken away from you for a year by the state at the age of 17 or 18?"

That will get them an answer, more to the point than the questions they are asking. Also ask the people and the congress:

"If congress will not draft workers for war jobs, do you think congress should draft your teen age sons and daughters for a year in the army and navy?"

My fear now is that the revulsion of the people to this youth-draft proposal will be so great, and the pique of draft-advocates in the war department so personal, that both leadership and support for a real democratic military training program will be lost.

College presidents, educators, churchmen, mothers and fathers should take hold of this situation affirmatively and not only defeat the compulsory draft but demand a democratic youth military training system, which will be efficient in creating a reserve for the trying times which are so clearly ahead of this nation. That is essential.

Missing Girl Found Working In Home

A 15-year-old Pasco, Wash., girl, whose parents have searched for her for quite some time, was located by Klamath county juvenile authorities working as a domestic in a local family.

The girl advised County Juvenile Officer Harold Hendrickson that her home life had not been happy, that her family lived in a trailer house and followed construction work, and that she wished to remain in Klamath Falls. The mother has arrived to try to persuade the girl to return home.

APO 928

Some place down in the Pacific there's found,
A tropical island floating around.
Because of restrictions, its name I cannot state,
But to us it's known as Nine Two Eight.

Nine Two Eight is a world of its own,
Where foxholes and tents are used as a home,
The language that's spoken is sweet to the ear,
But it would not look nice written down here.

Life on this island, I'd say it was rough.
To live and survive, you've got to be tough.
It's a place where the sun and the Tropical rain
Beat down on a man 'til he's almost insane.

Nine Two Eight is a Rat's Paradise,
For they are as thick as the coconut flies.
We have lizards and spiders as big as your fist
And all other Bugs that are known to exist.

The mosquitoes we have at Nine Two Eight,
Have more sting in their nose than a P-38
And back in the Jungles, large ones are seen
That are sometimes mistaken for a B-17.

After doing a hitch on Nine Two Eight,
An Alcatraz sentence would be quite a treat,
For a view from the "Rock" at least you can see,
Something besides these Coconut Trees.

On Sunday, all dressed in our herringbone twill
We go to the Chapel on San Juan hill.
Don't know why we go for we know very well
Prayers are no good when they're said down in Hell.

There are nights when it rains and leaks through your tent
And Golden Gate fever has you down and your spent,
And you roll in your bunk and of home you do dream,
While up in the trees the monkey bats scream.

In reading this story, don't think we complain,
For the reason we're here to us is quite plain.
And we'll stay on the job in the Tropical Sun,
'Til our Job is complete, and Victory is won.

When Victory is ours, and the day will be soon;
And Tojo and Hitler go to their doom;
If I had my way for the sentence I'd make
Them both serve life at Nine Two Eight.

When you see two or three big cubes of it on your butter plate, without having yet seen the sign, the blood is apt to rush to your head.

WHEAT

CHICAGO, March 5 (AP)—May wheat soared as much as three cents and other grain futures markets were strong today on a wave of commission house buying and short covering.

The trade was active in all pits; rye gained more than two cents and at times barley was more than four cents above Saturday's closing quotations.

Stimulating the demand was announcement that the commodity credit corporation is making more government-owned wheat available to the armed services for export and that the amount may reach 100,000,000 bushels within the next few months.

The program, not a new one, was regarded as especially significant because movement of such large stocks of grain would further aggravate an already acute freight car shortage.

Grain receipts at terminal markets have been curtailed seriously by the lack of transportation facilities. Unless conditions improve soon, many in the trade fear there will be much difficulty in filling maturing future contracts.

The volume of trading in wheat was not large simply because there as little for sale. The strength of the May contract, a new seasonal high, had a bullish influence in the off options. Some of the buying was for milling account.

Persistent commission house buying and local short covering accounted for much of the strength of rye. Heavy profit cashing developed when the May delivery hit $1.16, but the offerings were snapped up and had little effect on the market. The trade was heavy.

Corn was fine but did not show the strength of other grains. Local short covering was apparent and commission houses sold on a scale up.

Oats advanced to new highs for the session near the close with support coming from local shorts and from commission houses.

At the finish wheat was 1¾ to 2¼c higher than Saturday's close, May $1.70-1.69¾. Corn was up ¼ to ⅝c, May $1.14⅞. Oats were unchanged to ¾c higher, May 68⅝c. Rye was up ⅝ to 2¼c, May $1.16⅞-1.17. Barley was up 3c, May $1.13¼.
