MEN AND WOMEN IN SERVICE

A letter was recently received by Mr. and Mrs. Alvin W. Davis of Shasta Way, from their son, Pvt. Alvin W. Davis Jr., U. S. army, who is now serving overseas in the European theater of war. Davis, who is with the third army attacking German positions along the Siegfried line, was a student at Stanford university in Palo Alto, California, prior to enlisting in the army.

The letter was written from a rest camp behind the lines, and the young soldier had just returned from a pass to Luxembourg, at which time he claimed to have consumed all of the ice cream and pastries that he could lay his hands on. In describing the well-known French city, Davis writes:

"Luxembourg is a modern city of about 50,000 to 100,000 population, with a large amount of historic places . . . The people speak French, German, Luxembourg (which is a mixture of French and German) and English. Nearly every ice cream shop you can find has a proprietor who is able to understand you."

In the hope that the following would not be censored, the soldier wrote:

"The Germans that we have been running into are 'either too young or too old.' They are giving up easily, in fact, by the scores. One boy of 21 we captured was a Belgian who spoke a little English. He said that they were being forced to fight by other Germans. He was very glad the war was over for him, and he wanted to go to America after the war. Another prisoner went to some German occupied positions and talked approximately 32 of them into surrendering. They give many excuses for giving up. Most of them think they will be shot. Some of them gave up because a pill box next to their's machine-gunned some of our medics, which, of course, is against military law. Whatever their excuses are, they are not the soldiers Germany once had. One prisoner gave the prediction that Germany would give up in about a month."
