Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

THE fields of the Klamath agricultural area teem with activity these days—activity of men and birds.

On a round trip to Alturas on civic business yesterday, we observed repeatedly one of the most spectacular sights of the spring in this country—seagulls following the plow, disc and harrow. Feeding on animal and vegetable matter turned up, the birds virtually surround the man on the machine. They settle down momentarily in a dense, white mass, and then with much wing-flopping, catch up again with the machine. That goes on all day and until the field is covered by the equipment.

EPLEY

Charley Henderson tells us that the birds probably render some benefit to the farming operation, consuming grubs and insects that might be damaging to a crop. They obviously get a real feast out of it, and among the seagulls of the region the Klamath country must have a reputation for spring victuals. There are vast numbers of them here at this time of year.

(A lot of them are around in the fall, too, and are especially in evidence in the vicinity of the high school athletic field. The gulls last fall fed voraciously on flour used for lining Modoc football field, requiring frequent relining.)

In the Tulelake area yesterday, we also observed large numbers of ducks and geese feeding on the newly worked fields. Some of the fields were a brown mass of wildfowl.

Wildlife observers tell us that the geese and ducks have a special liking for fields where the grain stubble has been burned. This toasts the waste grain lying around on the ground, making a dish that is palatable to both birds and man.

We need not mention here that birds at times do a lot of damage to our crops. They help harvest the grain in the fall, sometimes beating the farmer to it. The bigger birds, especially geese, frequently do much damage to onion fields by simply walking around on them while they are wet, crushing and uprooting the young onions.

Klamath's birds, all and all, make quite a story.

Big Things Doing

IT is quite evident to the traveler along basin roads that there are big things doing agriculturally again. Some one is busy in almost every field.

We were impressed with the new equipment which was moving about over Klamath's fertile acres, and the modernistic design of that equipment. Small tractors, with the operator sitting snugly in a cab, are quite common nowadays.

We are told that some of these are equipped with radio, so the operator may be entertained as he works. After the war, they say, walkie-talkie outfits may be supplied, and then the farmer can converse with his wife at the house without losing a minute of the day's labor.

News Behind the News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, April 11—The government-directed Russian press has added attacks upon Senator Vandenberg and ex-President Hoover to their literary assaults upon the Vatican and Pundit Lippman.

The battering of Hoover started in the Daily Worker and was picked up by Pravda in Moscow a few days later without much alteration of the language. Vandenberg got his simultaneously on Moscow's own original initiative.

All these men did was to advocate methods of implementing the administration position in favor of recognition of the rights of small nations, pledging the new world order to "justice," and Hoover, in addition, pleaded for regional divisions of world authority—which is exactly what the British may desire for Europe to stop creeping Russian power.

The concentration of Russian press artillery upon certain American or democratic authorities has left everyone here a bit bewildered. What do the Russians want?

These objectives of red rhetorical shelling all favor Yalta and its purposes, or at any rate the initial Roosevelt position of the Atlantic charter, four freedoms, fourteen points, etc. What is Stalin up to?

• • • •

Back Scratching

THE common inner explanation here is that Moscow primarily wants to scratch Roosevelt's back at any and all opportunities. The men chosen are republicans, and while democrats could have been chosen who occupy the same position, the Moscow government might have roused the White House by setting upon them.

That is not enough of an answer. Stalin also promised at Yalta to let some of the London or other Poles not under his control into the new Polish government, but ignored his promise as soon as he got home and is elevating his men exclusively in Poland as in Bulgaria and Romania where the same circumstances prevail.

He subscribed to the Roosevelt peace aims, then sent an ambassador to the San Francisco conference, and in other ways betrayed a lack of interest in carrying them out. What is this game all about? Is Stalin trying to break up the Roosevelt plan while professing to be for it?

An inside check of those best able to know or guess (the top authorities) furnishes a satisfactory answer. At Livadia Stalin is supposed to have repeated again and again that it does not matter what kind of a world order is set up, the big nations are going to run it anyway. Repeatedly he displayed (according to my information) a lack of interest in side-schemes to protect the rights of smaller nations, as if these were fictitious.

All his subsequent acts tie in with that unannounced basic sentiment, his treatment of the Balkans, of central Europe and of the San Francisco conference which is the first assemblage of the small nations.

• • • •

Just Not Interested

THEN, he is genuinely not opposed to a world order or the Yalta results. He is not trying to sabotage the peace effort. His concept of the world order, however, is that it should serve the interests of the larger nations. He is therefore not interested in the four freedoms, the Atlantic charter and the original Roosevelt principles established for this war.

This, I think, is the fundamental cleavage between Russian and American diplomacy. We have, for instance, carefully built up the theory of individuality of nations in our Latin American policy, while playing the role of big brother there. We have been the good neighbor, although the biggest neighbor.

Stalin does not work that way, does not believe that way, will not follow that way, regardless of San Francisco, Roosevelt or anyone or anything. His advocacy of a veto right for the Big Five nations against the small (or other big nations) was in line with this.

His demand of 16 votes (taking 3) in the assembly where the smaller nations will have only one vote each, as do the large nations (excepting Britain with six through her empire subordinates) is along the same line.

I think this is the answer to the mystery troubling us. Russia seems to be going into the empire-building business like Britain. Her peace plan is to keep the upper hand, militarily, if not by militarism and run the world order that way. We are the only champions left of the small nations.

I think this is not only the cause of our trouble now, but it will cause increasing trouble from now on.

BUILDING USE SET

EUGENE, April 11 (AP)—Buildings vacated here by the U. S. army engineers will be used to house veterans attending the University of Oregon, the city council has decided.

Cascade

The usual spring mixture of weather still prevails at Cascade Summit. On Easter morning Cascade Summit awoke to find nine inches of snow had fallen during the night. The greatest depth of snow during the winter was reached on March 22 when sixty-three inches of snow was registered on the snowstake. Cascade Summit seems to be in the snow belt this winter, as at only a distance of nine miles on either side—namely at Crescent Lake and Cruzatte, the depth has been only 24 inches.

Mrs. L. L. Hall and son, Gordon, were Eugene visitors and shoppers in the middle of the week.

Mrs. Ben Benson and daughters have been in Oakridge and Eugene the past week on account of the serious illness of her mother, Mrs. Charles Hebert of Oakridge. Mrs. Hebert has been in the Sacred Heart hospital in Eugene with double pneumonia. She is now improving and has been removed to her home at Oakridge.

Tom R. Godley, who has taken the place of J. J. Doyle, roadmaster, Oakridge, was a Cascade Summit visitor Friday. He was formerly section foreman here for several years.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph R. Barton, Cruzatte, are in Eugene. Barton is receiving medical aid there.

Mr. and Mrs. Steve Bauman were Gervais visitors Easter Sunday.

Frank Rogers, section foreman, Cruzatte, was called to Eugene recently for his medical examination prior to army induction, but on account of his being in essential industry, he received another deferment.

An eastbound freight train was delayed at Cascade Summit for about three hours when a coupling broke off the engine just before entering tunnel No. 2. Another engine had to be dispatched to move the train.

Mrs. Betty McKee, formerly of Cascade Summit, has accepted a position with the Southern Pacific company in Eugene as call girl. She has purchased a home there. Her husband is in the service.
