Today's Roundup

THE Marine Barracks has brought nationwide fame to Klamath Falls as an ideal locality for recovery from malaria and filariasis. So successful has been the barracks as a center for recovery and training of men who contracted tropical diseases...

EPLEY

Statistically, here is the story: Out of 4700 men sent here with what was considered to be incurable tropical diseases, 2500 have been returned to full duty status. The men have shown an average net gain of nine pounds, and some are up 50 pounds.

Similar Project

IT HAS apparently now been recognized that the marine corps did a grand thing for its personnel in establishing a center where all tropical disease cases would be brought together under ideal climate conditions and with an outstanding marine administrative and navy medical staff.

For some time, there have been unofficial reports that the navy was considering a similar project here. It is now known that the matter has been placed before a congressional committee, and statements have been made by federal officials to local men that the enterprise is contemplated for Klamath Falls.

(Some suggestion was also made that it might be located at Camp Abbot, on the Deschutes river in Deschutes county, which has been abandoned as an engineering replacement center.)

The local report is that a site in the vicinity of the barracks is contemplated. That means, in general, east or northeast of town, and at an altitude higher than the city.

The reports of an additional installation here have blown hot and cold. The latest one is classed as hot, but there is nothing definite yet.

Health Center

THE reputation Klamath has gained as a health center is indicative of the hidden potentialities of the community. At some times in the past, hot springs here have been the basis for some thought and effort along this line, but the navy and the marine corps discovered the ideal conditions here for recovery from tropical disease.

This may well prove an important economic factor in the future of Klamath Falls.

News Behind the News

WASHINGTON, April 20—The world WPA idea and the postwar world spending notion have evaporated in the light of some fine words Mr. Truman expressed in signing the lend-lease bill.

Just a few days before Mr. Roosevelt's death, there had been a big argument in congress, which had delayed this extension of lend-lease authority until a year from next June 30 (not the end of the war). Frankly a majority in both houses was suspicious that the administration spenders intended to use this blanket lend-lease authorization for relief and rehabilitation in Europe.

They had heard the French, for instance, were already rehabilitating their railroads and putting machinery into factories from our lend-lease kitty. Supposedly this government felt the rehabilitation of French railroads was essential to hauling our war supplies to the front, and looked at the installation of our machinery in French factories the same way.

But this war has cost us $238,000,000,000 already (Morgenthau's last figure) and lend-lease already had amounted to $33,400,000,000 last December 31. Our financial position is not improving.

Should Decrease

LEND-LEASE should be about over as far as big figures are concerned, because no new contract could now be made in time to do any good in Europe and the far eastern war is largely our own effort except for lend-lease to China, whose ports are still closed.

Furthermore, we face the prospects of putting out above $25,000,000,000 more abroad for postwar without any lend-lease.

An official British statement estimated she would need $5,500,000,000 the year beginning next July 1, mostly for civilian relief. The French want $2,500,000,000 now and more after German resistance ceases. No one knows Russia's needs but she has asked $6,000,000,000 of credits.

British contracts already made will run to $7,500,000,000 for this year. Our UNRRA is supposedly planning an increase in its $1,200,000,000. The export import bank is said to want $1,300,000,000 more. These unspecified prospects could run up to $50,000,000,000—outside of lend-lease.

No one in this government has yet said anything about cutting down, so the house tacked a mild amendment on the lend-lease extension expressing the idea (no more) that lend-lease should not be used for postwar. Foreign Economic Administrator Leo Crowley promised it would not be so used, but in view of the reputation of the administration, this was not enough for the senate.

The Taft direct restriction against such use failed there by a tight tie vote, with Mr. Truman himself voting against it. This bare—if not invisible—margin of success for the government gave full warning that international postwar spending policies probably can not get through congress, at least that no such loose policy would be allowed.

Free Hand Given

YET the administration probably can do as it pleases, because its authority now has more than a year to run and it could pretend practically any expense was actually in the war effort or made necessary "to close up old contracts."

That is the cloud in which the matter was treated when Mr. Truman got it at the White House. He signed the bill with great praise of the Roosevelt policy, using several hundred words to do it, but he wound up with this promise:

"Lend-lease will be carried on until unconditional surrender or complete defeat of Germany and Japan."

Somehow congressmen believe Mr. Truman has more regard for money than Mr. Roosevelt had. They look on him as less of a spender. His promise was therefore interpreted as being what congress wanted.

However, it is all up to him. The law will let him do practically anything (the extension bill being merely a continuance of authority, without mention of any sum of money).

But to the very day this was written, no one has been able to get from the government any estimate of postwar costs, either as to lend-lease, Britain, Russia, China, UNRRA, export-import bank or any other phase.

Senate committees have repeatedly called upon the budget bureau for estimates of what will be needed, but the bureau always replied it did not know.

In the truest sense then, the postwar spending policy is still running open-ended, although congress is rearing warningly already against looseness, and Mr. Truman has promised lend-lease at least will stop at the war's end.

Whistles Signal False Alarm, Not

Klamath residents who heard the early morning air raid whistles with the shrieking of sirens, faintly alarmed by the 7:30 o'clock.

A check brought disappointing news, however. The noise was a combination of the whistles and the shrill of the fire department truck answering a false alarm from the Springfield district, and a V.E. day signal.
