News Behind the News

By PAUL MALLON

SAN FRANCISCO, April 26—Perplexing gyrations of soviet foreign policy have supercharged the inner atmosphere of this conference of the new world at the outset. Little may be gained by condemning the methods of Moscow, as a great many people out here are doing more in private than in public. But we all must understand this rising diplomatic mysticism more thoroughly if we are to deal with it without grave disadvantages. Here among the assembled diplomats of the hard new world, you may learn many things about it.

From a source I will accept as authoritative, I understand one member of the serving entourage furnished by the Russians to the late President Roosevelt at the Livadia (Yalta) conference was a skilled young Russian physician. He acted as valet or waiter, which position gave him a full opportunity to observe Mr. Roosevelt with a doctor's eye. He reported, of course, that Stalin was dealing with a dying man.

From that point forward you may observe how soviet policy has altered. The Livadia understanding for inclusion of the London democratic Poles in minor capacities in the Lublin Russo-Polish government has not been followed out by Stalin. It seems to me quite possible he decided after the report of the Russian physician that he would have to deal hereafter with a different American personality, Mr. Truman, and that he has been testing Truman with his Polish policy, ascertaining how far he can go with this younger, well man. Indeed, he only decided to send Molotov here at great expense to his own European diplomatic arrangements—after Mr. Roosevelt died.

Dramatic Example

I AM inclined to accept this story of the doctor, not only because subsequent events have been confirming it daily since then, but because it is a typical example of the thoroughness of Russian diplomacy in contrast with what our own has been in the past. There is another dramatic example, equally credible, told on the inside here.

The Warsaw underground leaders of the London Poles sent out word back in the middle of March, urging the London government to make public their names to the world, and particularly to the soviets. They decided to come out in the open. Throughout soviet occupation of their homeland they had masqueraded under fictitious names, so deeply guarded that even most London Polish officials did not know them. In return for this cooperative gesture, they asked that the Russians provide them a plane to London for the purpose of negotiating a settlement. By the very act of making themselves known, they gave up their underground work.

The London Poles agreed, and notified our government and others of the identity of these undercover workers. The workers themselves about March 23 appeared before a Russian commissar in Poland and requested their plane. The commissar took them to a Russian general who asked them to be at the airport the following morning to go to London. They appeared at the airport, but this was the last heard of them for some weeks.

Later the London Poles asked our government to find out where they were but received reply no April 2 that we could get no information. Later the British heard the underground leaders (15 or 16 in number) had been taken inside Russia, possibly to Kiev, to negotiate there with the Russian diplomats about a cooperative government.

Double Cross

THAT is the Russian explanation, but the Poles naturally believe the incident represents Russian confiscation of their underground in what Americans would call "a double cross." The indisputable point is we do not know and no one knows what goes on inside Russia.

I offer the story only as more evidence of the changed new world into which we are coming, somewhat unsuspectingly or at the very least, diplomatically unprepared to deal adequately.

At Washington Molotov's actions were in keeping with similar Russian tradition. He had no power to make any concessions on Poland, it was officially announced. At Bretton Woods and Dumbarton, it was the same. The Russian delegates could not insert a comma at either conference without wiring Moscow and waiting for an answer, frequently for days and sometimes weeks. Apparently it is going to be the same here. This is established Russian technique, and an advantage in dealing.

Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

LORTH SISEMORE, newly elected president of the chamber of commerce, is well qualified to assume the leadership of an organization that has a big job ahead of it in the coming year.

A native of Fort Klamath, Mr. Siseamore is a life-time resident of Klamath county. He has been active in civic affairs since he came here from law school to "hang out his shingle," and he has served a year on the board of directors of the chamber.

He is well acquainted with the problems and projects which must receive chamber and general community attention in the forthcoming 12 months.

EPLEY

25 Years

THE Klamath chamber is 25 years old. It was preceded by a number of civic organizations, which went under various names, but in 1920 it was formally organized under the present plan. In the 25 years, it has had 23 presidents. Only two presidents have been called upon to serve two terms, an indication that there has been no shortage of qualified manpower in the organization.

It is interesting, also, that all but two of the chamber's presidents still live in Klamath Falls. One of the 23 (J. A. Gordon) passed away; another (Ed Vannice) moved away. A third, Lt. Col. Harlan Bosworth, is merely "out of town" serving his country in Europe.

Annual Meeting

CHAMBER history will be reviewed briefly at the annual meeting to be held next Monday night, when Governor Snell will be the chief speaker. E. B. Hall, the chamber's first president, is in charge of this part of the program.

Incidentally, Monday night's meeting is not confined to chamber members. Members are permitted to invite friends to attend, up to the limit of 600 reservations. There should be a grand turnout in honor of the governor and in a demonstration of interest in the many important affairs of the community receiving chamber attention.

Briefs From the Pocket File

THAT was a swell tribute to Dr. Lowell T. Coggeshall, senior navy medical officer of Marine Barracks, when he was promoted to captain. . . . But here's something interesting. . . . We asked four civilians which they thought is the higher rank, captain or commander (Cog's previous rank). . . . They were unanimous in saying they thought commander must be higher. . . . A captain, who wears four stripes, is a step ahead of commander, and the rank compares with that of colonel in the army or marine corps. . . . The terrific demand for potatoes this year has resulted in shipment of a lot of culls from here. . . . An acquaintance brought in a report that Klamath culls are selling at Redding, Calif., under the grade of "Klamath 4-F". . . . Personally, we'll be glad when Klamath need no longer ship culls, which tend to lower the prestige of our fine potatoes, and uses the rejects for starch or other purposes.

The former Los Angeles resident admitted entering Augustus M. Clauson's store this week, and while armed with a .32 revolver advised Clauson that "this is a stick-up." She was forced to flee when Clauson struck at her with a wooden handle, and a short time later was picked up at 9th and Klamath by city police. Miss Cook admitted to the district attorney that she had a record which is now being checked.
