

93 CARRIED ON WELFARE ROLES HERE

Good times or bad, the Klamath county welfare commission continues to play a prominent role in the present county and state system of the social program.

The peak load of January, 1944, the year prior to the war, found 250 persons in Klamath county carried on the general assistance and service roles as compared to 93, currently registered.

The case load has not fluctuated the past three years, wartime period, since employment is now available to all employable persons, according to Altha Urquhart, administrator. The employable factor is the prime factor in this picture. The ruling that assistance is not available for employable persons is necessary in Klamath county, as no men or women who are able to work have applied for help.

The old age assistance case load has stabilized close to the 250 mark and has been at that figure for approximately three years. Average age of the recipient is 75. Employment does not enter into this case.

There is a variation of this rule every now and then, however. Take the case of one 81-year-old man who last year removed himself from the old age assistance role and received employment sufficient to make himself independent. This elderly man found work as a watchman and regained his independence to the point where he felt he was contributing to the war effort.

This particular person was born in 1861, the outbreak of the Civil war. In this war he was able to buy seven $25 war bonds, and in addition invested some of his earnings in a farm project which today makes him partially self-supporting.

The March report shows a total of 556 cases on the commission books at the present time. Of this number, 254 receive old age assistance; 18, aid for dependent children; three, aid to the blind; 261 general assistance and service of which 153 received no financial aid. This figure also includes service to inductees.

In January, 1944, the public welfare agency was elected as medical field agent for selective service boards. The agency was asked to prepare medical and social summaries to aid in the induction procedure of the inductee. The Klamath agency alone has prepared over 1200 reports for both local and outside boards. This has meant a lot of additional work for the local office, but has reportedly been of great value to the man going into the armed forces.

The Klamath welfare commission also reports on special requests relating to hardship. This means, Mrs. Urquhart explained, that the case worker advises whether or not the induction of a man would work an undue hardship on the family. The commission makes no recommendation, but simply a social study to place in the hands of the person making the decision.

During the past month, the commission gave service to 74 children, including counseling, location and certification of foster homes, adoption reports, assistance in placing children in day care homes, social work for the crippled children's division, and case work services with individual children in their own homes.

Members of the Klamath county staff include Mrs. Urquhart, administrator; Patricia Shaw, Marsha Brazil and Palma Hendricks, case workers, and Carduella Eels and Frances Gilchrist, clerks. Offices are located in the Veterans' Memorial building adjacent to the courthouse.

Search For Woman Who Abandoned Baby Continues In North

PORTLAND, Ore., April 26 (P)—The search for a woman who abandoned a 10-week-old girl in a Spokane hotel was pointed toward Kellogg, Idaho, today by a hint from a hotel official here.

Mrs. R. W. Teevin said a 28-year-old woman employed here as a hotel maid left for Spokane last week with her 10-week-old baby, and planned to go from there to Kellogg, to hunt work. The woman's name was found on a postcard in the Spokane hotel room where the baby was left.

"I've been sending her mail to Kellogg and it hasn't come back," said Mrs. Teevin. Policewoman Eileen Murphy said she was summoned several times by lodgers here who said the hotel maid was neglecting her baby.

Detective Capt. H. J. Lawrence, head of the homicide squad, said one of the prisoners, an Indian, was reported to have boasted he knew where Bill was hiding. The other was said to have been a friend of Bill when the eskimo was an inmate of the McNeil island federal prison.
