Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

FOR the benefit of readers not wholly familiar with the inter-regional highway situation now before the Oregon highway commission, we present today a rough sketch of the routes involved in this question.

The heavy line, from Portland to Weed, shows the proposed inter-regional route through Klamath Falls (by way of Pacific highway to Eugene, Willamette to Chemult, and No. 97 to Weed.)

The light line to the west shows the alternative route between Eugene and Weed, by way of the old Pacific highway (No. 99).

Before July 1, the state highway commission will decide which of these routes will be designated as a part of the inter-regional highway system.

This is a 40,000-mile system of highways throughout the U. S., the basic purpose being to connect region to region and major city to major city.

• • • •

Arguments

ENGINEERING features strongly favor the Klamath route for the through route. It has notable advantages in curvature, rise and fall, etc. It is less costly and much easier to build up to interstate standards, and it will prove much less costly for travelers because of its favorable engineering features. It is shorter.

These are facts that can't very well be refuted.

Arguments advanced in favor of the old Pacific highway route are principally that it serves a more thickly populated area, has a number of direct connections with the coast, and because it costs more, should get more federal funds.

These arguments will be discussed here from time to time. None of them carries enough weight to justify the inter-regional designation.

• • • •

Connections

A GLANCE again at the map will show some highly important connections with the Klamath Falls route that may have been overlooked by those interested in this situation.

One of these is the route that runs south from Klamath Falls to Reno and Los Angeles. This is a potentially great inland route, shortest and fastest between Portland and Seattle to the north, and San Francisco and San Diego to the south. It therefore has great inter-regional significance.

Just prior to the war, through travel on this route was steadily increasing. It was just being "discovered." Construction work in some sections will make it still more attractive to the public.

At the north end of the Klamath route of the inter-regional is the off-shoot toward Bend on The Dalles-California highway.

This again has inter-regional significance. It is a line with vital connections with the Willamette valley and Portland and it also is an important traffic link with points in the state of Washington.

• • • •

The Through Route

THERE is much to be said for highway development on both sides of the Cascades through southern Oregon. It is certain that both routes will be brought up to at least state standards.

The inter-regional designation, however, should go to the best through route.

No objective observer can question which that is. One such is former Governor Charles A. Sprague, who said in his Oregon Statesman column: "The Klamath Falls route has certain natural advantages in distance and grades, making it preferable for through travel. The Pacific highway is the older route, serves many more people along its route, and will have more local commercial traffic to handle."

Is an inter-regional highway designed to serve through travel, or local commercial traffic along the line?

News Behind the News

By PAUL MALLON

SAN FRANCISCO, May 1—The juncture at Torgau came about the same time as the one here, but was more than a little different. The Yank and Red starist who brought the two armies together in Germany drank champagne from beer mugs and slapped each other on the back. There was none of that here.

The meeting of the minds on the first series of conference compromises was not even celebrated by an announcement of official comment although the press had been kept waiting two hours, practically breathless, to get it. Mr. Stettinius had called the newsmen together to give out the explanations and then had to tell them with confessed embarassment that he could not give it out.

The fact was the juncture here did not seem to offer the best possible publicity value. We had at least a three to one vote over the Russians on the first Molotov proposition. Britain and China were with us on following the diplomatic precedent and common social amenity by letting the host be the chairman of the conference. Frankly I do not recall having heard of a conference at which the host nation was not in charge of the chairmanship as a matter of courtesy. I have not heard of any other nation at this conference which was behind the novel Russian proposition, except Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, which probably are two votes for Russia anytime.

• • • •

Preserves Position

THUS we gave more generously than may have been evident in the bare announcements, by accepting the British "compromise" of rotating chairmanships under a restriction which retains administrative control of the conference to Stettinius. The deal preserved our just position as host from the practical standpoint, but gave Molotov the prestige of having broken the usual custom.

At the first juncture out here, we gave also on the Stalin proposition of three seats for Russia in the assembly. On this Mr. Truman said in effect Mr. Roosevelt had promised it to Stalin at Livadia out of consideration to the war effort of the Ukraine and White Russia and the devastation they have suffered. Well we have 48 states which contributed to the war effort—including Russia's—although they have not suffered devastation, and it seems to me a somewhat disjointed conclusion anyway that votes in the assembly should be awarded on the basis of devastation. That part of the excuse sounded shallow, and our generosity in the matter was apparent in the Stettinius announcement before he left Washington that we would give up what Mr. Roosevelt was claiming as his part in the deal—three seats for us. The balance side of the ledger for us in the matter is not apparent, and the British are keeping their six.

But Mr. Truman was on sound ground with his final conclusion that as Mr. Roosevelt had given his word of approval, he would adhere to that word.

If leaders do not keep their word—word given for their nations not for themselves personally and therefore not to die within— agreements here or anywhere will not be worth making.

• • • •

Pledges Made

BUT at the initial San Francisco juncture there were no announcements about others keeping words given even before the start of this war about freedom, about Poland and the real basic structure upon which this conference program was erected. There is the word given in the Atlantic Charter by Mssrs. Roosevelt and Churchill which all here have since signed and which was specifically passed on to Russia through the Anglo-Russian treaty of May 26, 1942. This word was that no one—absolutely no one—would seek any "aggrandizement territorial or otherwise" (hegemonies?); would not even allow territorial changes except "with the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned" (London Poles?), and thus fully "recognize the rights of all people to choose the form of government under which they will live" . . . but we are—even promising specifically "sovereign rights and self government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them (Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, etc?)

The Anglo-Russia treaty started out with the pledge that its very purpose was "to give expression . . . at the peace settlement and during reconstruction . . . on the basis of the principles . . . made on August 14, 1941 (the above cited Roosevelt-Churchill charter.)" Furthermore, that treaty describes the promised principles as those "to which the government of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics," had already adhered (Moscow declaration.) This was the basis of our lend-lease help to Britain and Russia and "military and other assistance" and everything we have done since then, and the documents say so. Indeed the Anglo-Russian treaty pledges "non-interference in the internal affairs of other states" in those exact, uneraseable words.

If those promised words are to be forgotton, many people out here are thinking, if not saying, that the bargaining is going to be one-sided. It will get down to the question of who is going to keep which word. Thus, it is difficult to see that the "compromise" at the initial juncture came out quiet even in balance.

DON'T IGNORE IT

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore., (To the Editor)—While listening to the radio reports of the peace conference being held in San Francisco, the following comes to mind. "There are in China 450,000,000 people, in India 350,000,000, Thailand and Indo-China 32,000,000, Burma-Malaya 20,000,000, East Indies 70,000,000, Japanese 70,000,000, Koreans 25,000,000, a total of 1,017,000,000. Besides these there are about 170,000,000 in Russia who are strongly oriental in their outlook." If these, dark millions are betrayed by the eventual peace, then some Asiatic nation will arise as a genuine and unselfish emancipator, and the ensuing conflict will make the present war seem like an amateur rehearsal. At the end of such a war, the white man would find himself in the Jim Crow seat. The only hope of survival or salvation for the Anglo-Saxon is the "Sermon on the Mount." If we ignore it we are lost.

YOUR MOTHERS' LOVE

Did you ever stop for a minute
—and think of what she means to you?
That gray-haired lady who waits back home,
And prays you safely through.

When some trouble may come your way
And the law might intervene,
It's always that lady who prays you out
With that spirit so great, yet unseen.

Remember the days when you were a child
And would fall and hurt a knee;
Then get up crying to Mother's side?
You knew where comfort would be.

How many times have you forgotten her love,
Until some danger arose?
Then you cried for Mother's help,
Her love forever grows.

Never forget your Mother's love
For greater it never will be,
The greatest weapon a man could have,
I'm glad I keep it with me.

THE FLAG GOES UP

The flag goes up on war-torn Iwo Jima:
It floats in starry splendor on the breeze.
How bitter was the price in blood and anguish!
In humbleness we dwell on deeds like these.
Our flag is flying over Iwo Jima
Where heroes sleep in many a lowly grave,
Through endless years their fame shall glow but brighter
The while we kneel in homage to the brave.

Outside on the streets were newspapers with big banner lines. The Evening News declared "Himmler Decides—Surrender Papers Are All Ready For Signing."

Clings to Hopes

A Hamburg radio broadcast meanwhile predicted that London and Washington were "preparing for tremendous news about the development of the war today, May Day," but still clung to hopes the Germans might split the Big Three.

"The tremendous news London and Washington are preparing will have the character of an interim balance sheet," the nazi broadcast said. "As long as there is no unity among Germany's enemies there can be no final news."

Says News Near

The Tokyo radio said an important announcement could be expected within a few days in connection with the negotiations between Himmler and Count Bernadotte.

From free Danish underground sources in Malmoe on the southern coast of Sweden, meanwhile, came a report that German forces already had begun moving out of Copenhagen with the apparent intention of abandoning Denmark.

These same sources said a conference between Swedes, Danes and Germans was held all through last night at King Christian's Amalienborg castle in Copenhagen, pointing toward a possible German surrender of Denmark. They believed an official announcement from the king might be forthcoming soon.
