Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

A MARINE from the Barracks dropped into this office to chat the other day and asked us this question:

"Why in heck does any community try to get a big military installation located nearby?"

He went on to tell us of a number of cities which had been over-run by service men from camps much larger than the cities themselves. He mentioned one town in the south where he had worked as a civilian before entering the service, and which had "gotten" a huge army camp. "It ruined that town," he said. "I'll never go back there."

EPLEY

Why do they do it? he queried.

Two Reasons

WELL, we've personally been living in a two-installation town for quite awhile, and we've personally sat in the councils of civic groups that have worked to bring in installations and wrestled with the problems that came with them. We tried to answer our visitor's question.

Basically, there are two principal reasons for community yearning for military installations, it seems to us. One is economic, the other psychological.

Construction and operation of a military installation means payrolls and heavy spending. It amounts to more than a good-sized industry. Most individuals will gladly take on quite a few problems if quite a few dollars come with them. That's true of a community.

The other major reason is the civilian yearning for excitement and some measure of participation when there's a war on. Civilian morale got pretty low around Klamath Falls in the early war period, when there was no installation here. People felt the town was out of the swim, and we had trouble keeping people here to work in one of the most critical war industries in the nation. There was no romance or excitement in the air. Most of the young people were gone, and there were no others to take their place. (An old guy gazes at the full moon on a balmy night and regrets there are no young people around to make the most of it.)

The installations came, and changed the whole atmosphere of Klamath Falls. There sprang up a laudable desire to do something for service men, and there were service men around to receive it. Civilians got a lift out of seeing uniformed figures jamming the streets. Don't kid yourself—it would have been pretty dull here without the air station, the marine base, and Camp Tulelake.

Doing A Job

OUR young marine friend, back from overseas where there was too much excitement, may have had trouble getting the picture we sought to paint for him.

He probably wondered why in heck anyone would want to give up quiet and peace for something else, when there had been moments he would have given his right arm for a little quiet and peace.

We think, too, that many of our service men over-rate their nuisance properties. We've had some of them here who must have been a good town before the marines and sailors came along.

With a very few exceptions, the service men have helped to make Klamath Falls a better town. The installations have been real assets in more ways than we will try to enumerate.

It is also noteworthy that Klamath's installations are moderate in size. It is true that some towns have been hard hit by enormous influxes of service men that could not possibly be absorbed, with unfortunate results for both civilians and military people. Klamath's installations have been better keyed to the size of the community. We COULD have too much of that sort of thing.

Finally, there has been a lot of local satisfaction, among those who know, in seeing the installations do a real job. Their success in their assigned fields is a real tribute to this community, and has helped to open up new opportunities for future development.

The War Today

B. J. M. ROBERTS JR.

THE impulse this morning is to write "This is V-E day." It would be, if Allied men were not still fighting and dying in the pockets which the last fanatical Germans can't hold but refuse to surrender completely. Or it would be if V-E day had not already passed.

Historians will argue that V-E day was the day in 1940 that Hitler failed to invade England, or the day he beat himself by invading Russia, the day he was turned back at Stalingrad or El Alamein, or the day he failed to throw the Allies off the Normandy beaches.

Whatever the verdict, the day when Germany changed her military policy, stopped fighting for key centers and began to declare them open cities, will stand as a great climax of the war. We are down to the mop-up, and it begins to look as though the final days of guerrilla warfare may not be so extensive or so exasperating as once expected.

Want To Save Honor

WITHOUT Hamburg, Prague, Munich, Stettin, Vienna, Bremen or any important hedgehog left, only heaven knows why any Germans keep fighting. Probably only on mad momentum—plus the fact that they haven't arrived yet at all the army headquarters to accept all the surrenders, that all the Nazi commanders haven't had the opportunity for their last little "honor satisfying" battle to save them from the "ignominy" of surrendering without firing a shot.

Regardless of history's decision on just when Germany lost the war militarily, there will be little debate on moral grounds. Germany lost the war before she began it, by arraying against herself the freedom-loving, right thinking people of the globe.

Nowhere is this so well demonstrated as in Italy, where the erstwhile Hitlerites have just surrendered.

All-Nation Battle

HARDLY a nation but has been represented there, many of them by fully organized armies—Poles, Hindus and Moslems from India, Jews, Americans, Britons, Canadians, New Zealanders, Australians, Yugoslavs, French, negroes from New Orleans and negroes from Africa, Japanese from Hawaii, and the first important expeditionary force ever sent across the seas from Latin-America, the Brazilians; Italians themselves since they escaped from their fascist rulers.

The German idea arrayed all these, and more, against itself. The recent sweep of events has been so great as to approach confusion. The end of resistance in Holland, Denmark, Norway and the remaining continental pockets seems merely a matter of arrangements. We are in the middle of the greatest military surrender in all history. The curtain falls on a Germany, which is not brave, but merely disgusting, in its final tail-lashings.

POLICE TRY TO LOCATE K. R. HOWARD

City police are attempting to locate Kenneth R. Howard, formerly a resident of The Dalles, whose last known address was the Arcade hotel in Klamath Falls.

Important papers are being held for him any anyone knowing of his whereabouts should contact the police department immediately.

One of the first arrests for violation of the city dog ordinance was made yesterday when Mrs. Margaret McMartney, 235 E. Main, posted $5 bail for allowing a dog to run at large.

P. O. Key, naval air station, reported to police yesterday the loss of a billfold containing gas coupons and his identification card. It was thought to have been lost on S. 6th.

Sidney Johnson, 2421 Orchard, posted $5 bail yesterday for failure to have a driver's license and Harold P. Sorenson, Shasta view, was arrested by city police for making an improper left hand turn.

Six drunks, one drunk and disorderly case, and one case of illegal possession of intoxicating liquor appeared in police court today. Two additional drunks bailed out.

PIRC Manager Back From Susanville

Chet Irving, secretary-manager of the pine industrial relations committee here, returned last night from conducting negotiations with the northern California district council, LSW-AFL, at Susanville, Calif.

Negotiations concerned a 10-point proposal made universally by all lumbering operators in northern and central California, Irving said.

Black Market Versus Brighter Meals

I guess our town doesn't like rationing any better than other folks. But when a fellow went from door to door the other day, peddling butter, cheese, and bacon without permits, he didn't find a single taker.

Ed Carey's missus, Sarah, summed it up. "I'd just be ashamed to have that butter on my table," Sarah says. "I'd a heap rather have my family and guests put up with what I can serve honestly, than give 'em a treat from the Black Market."

These days, most people are agreed that a simple menu of unrationed foods and substitutes is a badge of honor... no apologies required!

And from where I sit, housewives can brighten limited meals with cheerful table decorations, sparkling cider or tangy ice-cold beer, or side dishes of homemade preserves and fruits and nuts. Those little touches can be mighty helpful to the appetite.
