

POD GROWERS DISLIKE WET WEATHER HERE

Pod growers whose crops of peas and beans are seeded with range men on the weather, potato growers being disgusted. Some planting has been delayed. Some planting has been about 10 days behind schedule this year on account of the rains, Henderson said. No rot has been reported on crops already planted. An spell of several days after rain would cause almost total rot. If warm weather follows the showers, no damage should occur, the agent said, as growth will progress immediately. No bright promises of undisturbed sunshine are held out, however, by weather forecasters for this area.
