The War Today

By J. M. ROBERTS JR., AP Foreign Affairs Analyst

RUSSIA, under direct appeal, has come through again with evidence that she is determined to help establish a world security organization of some value.

It was always inconceivable that the point at issue—Russia's demand for the right to prevent any given discussion from coming before the council—should defeat the aims of the conference. Even the reasons for the demand were a mystery, like so many other Russian actions which have had the San Francisco delegates shaking their heads, not even pretending to understand. It has seemed almost as though Stalin was creating situations through which he could later indicate willingness to cooperate.

Result Not Important

The ultimate, practical result is not so important. The Big Five still retain the individual right to veto real action in the case of threatened war. True, to have prevented the council from becoming a real forum might have permitted developments, in the dark, of situations which would baffle world opinion when they suddenly burst into view.

But the big thing is that Stalin has instructed his delegation to give in. There is no evidence of a trade. The Russians are told to show a conciliatory attitude in the interests of the success of the conference.

Has Right To Sympathy

In this—if she can be accepted as free from aggressive motives, of which there is no evidence—at least from America. It was only yesterday that suspicion of other powers was a motivating force here. Also, Russia can easily remember when France, Britain and the United States, of the present Big Five, sent armies to Siberia and (although it must be said that Japan was by far the worst) either directly or indirectly supported some of the worst cut-throats of record in their opposition to the founders of the present regime. And it was only four years ago that Winston Churchill told the Russians, in effect, that Britain didn't like them, but of course would be glad to have them kill Germans. That Britain ultimately loaned them tremendous help, and that the United States probably provided the balance of power, has done much to offset these things. But Russia knows she was badly needed, that she came through, and is as jealous of prerogative as any new power.

Every report from Germany indicates that on the lower level of contact between armies the Russian soldier and the American soldier appreciate each other, that as men to men there are no barriers between them. It is obvious, too, that the Russian army is thankful for American military aid to a degree which is everything that could be desired.

Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

A THICK sheaf of letters and telegrams in the office of Sheriff Lloyd Low testifies to the wide ramifications of the hunt for ex-Police Chief Earl Heuvel, reported today as held in a small Arkansas town for Klamath authorities and the FBI.

The sheriff's files shows letters from all parts of the country and from across the border. There were dozens of false but well-intended clues received from local sources and outside points. Law enforcement agencies were generally helpful.

Inside Route To L. A.

AMONG the errors in a Siskiyou News editorial on the recent highway designation controversy is an inference that Klamath interests sought to have the inter-regional designation go south to Alturas and Reno, rather than by way of Weed.

The women who have started the temperance movement in our city wish to state that the Women's club has nothing to do with the movement.
