CROPS THRIVE ON HOTTER WEATHER

PORTLAND, June 21 (AP)—Hot weather hit most of Oregon this past week, and the weather bureau reported today that crops thrived on it.

Results of the high temperatures, as recorded in the weekly crop-weather survey:

Corn improved; winter wheat began ripening; some spring wheat is heading; cherries are turning red, a few already picked; haying is well underway, with some hay stacked and baled; fiber flax is blooming; sugar beets are thriving; later fruits are developing well.

The mercury hovered in the eighties and nineties in most regions, and hit a state-wide maximum of 100 at Medford. A week ago, however, several eastern localities reported freezing temperatures, and some beans were hurt by frost.

Other discouraging points in the crop picture: the strawberry yield is not uniformly high; cherries are too small in some areas; some growers are replanting potatoes to replace earlier seedings destroyed by unfavorable weather.
