Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

IT'S warm, as it should be on the week of Fourth of July celebrating. The temperature may get up to all of 90 degrees, or maybe a little higher. But you'll hear no complaints from this corner.

We haven't said a harsh word about warm weather in this country since our visit a couple of summers ago to Washington, D. C., Chicago, Ill., New York, N. Y., Boston, Mass., and a few way-points.

EPLEY

After staggering around in the hot muck that is Washington atmosphere in July, we came to the conclusion that we had never before known when we were well off out home in Klamath Falls in the summer time. Boston was just as bad as Washington, and Chicago and New York weren't much better.

Since then, we've made it a point, when there gets to be a lot of talk around town about the heat, to remind our readers how favored in the summer time is the high country of east-of-the-mountains Oregon and northern California.

Our experience with summer heat here is not only far more pleasant than that in the sweltering east and midwest, but it also has it all over the lower valleys on our own west coast. That's a truth well known to anyone who has occasion, in hot weather, to drive over the mountains to the west, the southwest, or the northwest.

Open Letter

Herb Grey, President
Jackson County Chamber of Commerce
Medford, Ore.

Dear Herb:
In the recent friendly ruckus between us over that highway designation, a great deal was said from your side about the economic superiority of the country along your route as compared with that over here. People over there added up a lot of figures and set up a hue and cry that convinced the highway commission.

We have before us the June 28 report of the Seventh War Loan campaign, and in it we find some interesting comparisons between Jackson and Klamath counties.

First there are the E bond quotas. Jackson's is $1,067,000 and Klamath's is $1,538,000. For some reason, the gents who figure out those quotas thought we ought to buy more bonds than Jackson county.

Now, neither you nor we have made our E bond quotas. But I note the report that Klamath has bought $1,115,712 in E bonds when this report was prepared. That was 72.5 per cent of quota. Jackson, on the same date, had bought $651,144, or 61 per cent. Klamath had purchased $464,568 more in E bonds than Jackson county.

The 1940 census population of Jackson county is 38,213, while that of Klamath county is 40,497. Since 1940, Jackson has had the big Camp White development and Klamath has had the influx that came with the naval air station and the Marine Barracks. The last figures from the OPA, as we recall, showed you had more population than we have. They may not have been right. Anyhow, we have a bigger bond quota than you have, and we have bought a lot more than you have.

Neither of us can be proud of our E bond sales, because we both have failed so far to make our quota. But the comparisons noted here, if you will republish them over there, may serve to spur the purchases in both of our counties, and that would make them most worthy.

Personally, we think it would be a grand thing if our time-honored community rivalry would have the effect, in this case, of pushing both counties over the top in this campaign. There isn't much time left.

Sincerely,
Malcolm Epley.

Co-Operation

ON Page One of the Lakeview Examiner this week was a brief notice to the effect that the Examiner office would be closed on Wednesday, July 4, and asking that "copy be turned in as early as possible this week."

Offhand, that sounds as if an inter-office communication somehow got into print. But that's not it. The Lakeview Examiner, like many other smaller city newspapers with friendly subscribers, has a lot of volunteer reporters around town. The note was intended for them. Co-operation of the readers is mighty important to the daily or weekly job of getting out a newspaper like the Lakeview Examiner, or The Herald and News.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, July 2—Two senators were talking over the San Francisco peace formula.

One wondered what steps the administration would take to sell it to the people, observing that if Mr. Roosevelt were alive there would no doubt be a great pressure propaganda drive organized to herald the document as the greatest advancement of man since the ten commandments—and perhaps even greater.

The second senator correctly concluded that Messrs. Truman and Stettinius are modestly putting forward their program, laying no great claims for it, and allowing it to speak for itself. Indeed, the inner congressional sentiment seems generally to run to the theory that while this formula certainly does not guarantee either peace or security, no alternative improvement is possible now. Thus, the majority opinion concludes the document might as well be ratified to see what Mr. Stettinius and the other world organization leaders can work out of it.

The San Francisco conference did not materially alter the Dumbarton Oaks scheme. Its main work was the building up of the economic and social council and adoption of the trusteeship system. Basically the peace-keeping project was left without change, to wit:

No Police Force

THE security council, backed by the chiefs of staff of the five big United Nations, will not have an international police force. To stop an aggressor, it will order nations to take military measures.

The council itself may take economic steps to isolate an offender, but the big five nations specifically retain the right to veto any action and an objection by any one of them can break down the whole peace formula.

This veto right was retained at San Francisco over the protest of small nations, because the big three (Russia, Britain and the United States) have the only formidable sea, air and land forces and they did not want the other eight smaller nations on the council ordering their armies around.

This formula, then, is purely tentative, and how much it will amount to remains for future events to determine. Surely it should stop little wars, but it does not even pretend anything more than hope for avoiding big ones.

Indeed, it recognizes realistically the facts of international life and is far away from the fancy projects advanced earlier in the war by some officials of this government to promote "one world," a quart-of-milk-a-day, etc.

The idealism of the document is centered largely in the economic and social council, but even there, restraint is noticeable. The charter gives this council the obligation of promoting "human rights and fundamental freedoms for, and without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion."

It does not mention freedom of press, which certainly is a fundamental freedom. Of what good is freedom of language without freedom to use it? It seems a full pledge for our constitutional liberties was avoided, possibly for fear of embarrassing contrasts with the Russian system of political use of its press under dictatorship.

Moderated Notions

THE navy seems to have caused Mr. Stettinius to moderate his trusteeship notions to some vague extent not clear in the text. It appears a special category for bases in "strategic areas" has been created, but whether we will get ownership of the Jap islands for ourselves is not plainly settled. There are many other apparent defects in the scheme which may lead to future trouble.

A possibility of conflict between the general assembly of all the nations and the security council is apparent, although the council will dominate and can force any important action. Most of the voting is to be done by two-thirds, which raises the prospect that action desired by the majority conceivably could fail and no decision may be reached in some cases. Certainly action is likely to be limited to what everyone wants.

This is not a particularly new world envisioned by the charter. It is merely a continuation of the war world cooperation policy of the United Nations into the peace, providing them with a very loose working arrangement.

The really important influence for peace or war will be wielded by the Big Three in the development of their future foreign policies, inside or outside this organization.

Forrestal was here today to inquire into the critical need for manpower in the ship repair program, 13th naval district headquarters announced.

Forrestal, who arrived by navy plane last night, spent this forenoon at the Puget sound navy yard, where he planned to inspect the carrier Bunker Hill and other ships under repair after Japanese attacks.

FAVORS CHARTER

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore., (To the Editor)—We, the people, are forging the peace. The voice of the people was back of the Moscow agreement, back of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, back of the San Francisco conference.

We, the people of the United States, want no more wars. Already the seeds of the next war are in the wind. Friction between nations can only be removed by UNITED action; by settling small arguments we can avoid great wars.

We can achieve peace. The United States and 49 other nations met at San Francisco. They drew up a charter for a United Nations organization. Nations, acting together, offer the best hope of preventing wars. This time the United States must lead the way to peace. Our senate must ratify the United Nations charter. Speak out for future peace! Write your senators today!

It is not important that the letters be neatly typed, couched in a fine literary style, or full of cogent arguments. It IS important that they come from people in all walks of life, that there be an unprecedented quantity, and that they represent a great popular outcry for United States leadership in building the peace. If the public demand is strong enough and sufficiently sincere, there will be no delay and no attempts to sabotage U. S. participation in the organization.

The Klamath County League of Women Voters has furnished speakers for 25 organizations in Klamath county and northern California in order to explain the United Nations charter to our people. This is our opportunity to open the door to peace. WRITE YOUR SENATORS TODAY.

Sincerely,
MURIEL T. MCKAY,
President Klamath County League of Women Voters.

"We intend to cement our relationship with the 27 million organized workers of the soviet union through the world federation of trade unions," the resolution read.

ODT RULINGS ON RAIL TRAVEL SET

SEATTLE, July 2 (AP)—Further regulation by the office of defense transportation designed to curb unessential railroad travel is planned for the near future, the Post-Intelligencer reported yesterday.

The next move, the paper said it had learned from rail officials in this area, probably will be an ODT order removing sleeping cars throughout the nation from all "overnight" runs, such as the Seattle-Spokane, Seattle-Portland and Seattle-Walla Walla trips.

The ODT last week announced its new five-day advance reservation policy.

The new order is expected to be made public between July 15 and August 1, the Post-Intelligencer article said. Through sleeping cars on transcontinental trains would not be affected, however.

The so-called "set-out cars which accommodate these overnight services would be surrendered to the army's Pullman pool.
