

OREGON WATER SUPPLY ENOUGH FOR '45 CROPS

PORTLAND, July 5 (P)—Oregon still has adequate water for irrigating this season's crops, the weather bureau reported today in its weekly crop-weather review.

Recording a week with little rain, the bureau said spring grain needs more moisture. Corn is being delayed by a lack of bright sunshine, and winter grain is ripening slowly, with only rye and barley ready for harvest.

A favorable fruit outlook was reported by the bureau—apples, pears, nuts, late cane fruits doing well. Strawberry picking is nearly over in warmer areas, and raspberries and cherries are being harvested. The cherry yield varied greatly from orchard to orchard.

Many growers have finished cutting the first alfalfa and clover crops, and cut some wild hay, oats, and vetch. The bureau said both pastures and livestock continue in good condition.

Umatilla county reported many canning peas still unharvested for lack of help. Central Oregon complained of a backward potato crop, and other vegetables injured by local frost. Hops and tomatoes, however, are doing well.

CERTIFICATION OF SEEDS DISCUSSED

Uniform certification standards for seed potatoes may be in force for the 1946 season throughout the west as the result of agreements reached by representatives of seven states and British Columbia at the recent seed certification conference held at Oregon State college, reports Chester Otis, assistant extension specialist in farm crops, who arranged the session for the extension service.

All delegates agreed to submit a uniform set of grades and standards in their home states which, if adopted, will cover both physical characteristics and disease tolerance for the various grades agreed to.

The schedule of grades and standards agreed to approximately the proposal for Oregon made this year by committees of the Oregon Seed League working with extension and experiment station officials. If the standardization program goes into effect the western states will have taken a major step toward improvement of the potato industry and commercial relationships in this enterprise, Otis believes.

Delegates from Idaho, California and Oregon also agreed to uniform standards for ladino clover seed certification. These three states produce the entire domestic supply of this seed.

OREGON SEEDS AID LAND PROTECTION

Oregon-grown seeds are providing a protective cover for approximately 600,000 acres of southern states' farm land through the operation of the 1944 seed purchase program, according to a report from the state AAA committee.

About one-fourth of the total 1944 Oregon crop of cover crop seeds was purchased by the AAA from Oregon growers and dealers. Shipped to southern states, the seed is distributed by AAA to farmers through a conservation materials program similar to that in effect here for lime and phosphate. Cost of the seed is deducted from the farmer's AAA practice payment, and he in turn uses the seed to grow cover crops to check erosion and restore fertility to depleted soils.

The guaranteed prices under the purchase program have enabled Oregon growers to expand production of cover crop seeds, thus furnishing a dependable source of supply of seed to stimulate the practice of cover cropping in southern states, the AAA committee explains.

Purchases in 1944 brought to 237 million pounds—4000 carloads—the amount of Oregon seed bought and shipped by the AAA since the program was instituted in 1940. Largest single year was 1942, when the continent movement of seed under the program amounted to 96 millions pounds.

Haying Underway; Good Crops Reported In Basin

With the Fourth of July over, early rains, with only a few farmers throughout the county are getting haying underway. Although some growers were cutting before the first of the month, most of them preferred to wait for several days so they would not have to lay off their crew over the holiday.

According to J. R. McCambridge, assistant county agent, the hay is in good condition after minor cases where it was hurt by hail or heavy run-off water when a field was located at the base of a hill.

Although there has been good growth, the crop is about average and McCambridge expects that the volume may be a little under last year's figures.

The labor demand for haying is just beginning but the farm labor employment office expects to have a better idea of the demand for workers by next week. At present there are sufficient workers but this may change as more calls for them come in.

FATALITIES DOUBLED
