Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

A GOOD word for a democratic president was voiced in Klamath Falls today by a republican congressman.

Big, good-natured and sincere Lowell Stockman of the second Oregon district said he couldn't conscientiously refrain from speaking out in praise of President Harry Truman.

EPLEY

"Mr. Truman assumed tremendous responsibilities and he has won widespread good will and admiration," said Mr. Stockman. "He has aroused a desire on the part of everybody in Washington to help him make a success in the presidency. He has no illusions about his ability to do everything himself—instead, he has a knack for choosing competent men to handle the big jobs, and is giving them full rein once they are selected."

Mr. Truman's homely middle-class background (he's an ex-haberdasher who once went broke), his widespread acquaintanceship and friendship in both parties on capitol hill, and his obvious desire to make good for the country, are factors that have tended to create a friendly feeling throughout the nation, Mr. Stockman commented.

The Oregon congressman said he might not always agree with Truman, and he might not always vote with him. But that's his realistic appraisal of the Truman situation at this time.

Night Flying

QUITE a stir was created in our town by the night-flying navy planes today. A lot of folks reported to this office or to the police station or to the air station that they lost sleep last night, and there was some indignation.

We lost a little sleep ourselves, but we are not in sympathy with the indignation. We think that the navy fliers should refrain from low-flying, motor-gunning, or whatever else is unnecessary in connection with night-flying and which creates a disturbance in the town. (It is our understanding the navy officials at the station have taken steps to prevent a repetition of these things.) But we do wish to point out that night flying is an essential part of the training program, that the guys who do the flying are losing a lot of sleep themselves, and that a little loss of sleep on the part of townspeople is a minor matter in comparison with the mission of the local navy installation.

We think it will be fair enough if the navy will avoid unnecessary disturbance, and if we put up with the necessary disturbance with good spirit. It isn't much to ask.

An Inspiring Trip

OUR good friend, Fred Heilbronner, is back from Portland, and he has written the following piece which we think is interesting and worthy of something better than the waste-basket:

Dear Mac:

A week or so ago, while in Portland on business, an acquaintance spoke of travelling to San Francisco and asked the best way to travel from Eugene on. Naturally, being from Klamath, and a resident for about 40 years, I told him of the shorter, faster and better highway by way of Klamath. He was surprised to learn that it was not only 15 miles shorter to San Francisco by way of Klamath, but that there were numerous less-sharp curves and also easier grades. When I arrived at the Goshen Junction, I took a picture of the sign: left San Francisco, 555 miles; right San Francisco, 570 miles, and sent it to him.

Then as I drove along homeward bound, I got to thinking and figuring. From Goshen Junction to Klamath Falls, it is about 172 miles. Here's the point: Out of that 172 miles, about 150 miles of that distance (taking out a few miles from Goshen toward Oakridge and a few miles from Klamath Falls to the Agency) the motorist travels continuously through forests on both sides of the highway. He travels by rivers, streams, creeks, and lakes, the railroads, farms, small towns, mountains and snowcovered peaks. He travels through virgin fir, pine and fir, lodge pole pine, and virgin pine, and finally winds up in the famous Wood River valley and Upper Klamath lake before reaching Klamath Falls. Where else in Oregon can one travel 150 miles continuously, with forest on both sides of him? Not only that but from Oakridge on to the summit of Sun mountain, the motorist can negotiate any curve at 50 miles an hour with safety (in peacetime).

How many of our own Klamath people have stopped to analyze these facts, let alone residents from other parts of Oregon? I've been travelling this route ever since it was opened, and it just now dawned on me.

If these ramblings are of any value to you, Mac, in helping promote our highway, and our Klamath country, you are at liberty to use any part of it. Otherwise, discard it in your waste basket.

Sincerely,
FRED.

We Got Back

ANYTHING can happen at a fire, and in this country where most people keep a little ammunition around for deer rifles or shotguns or souvenirs, flying lead is a possible hazard at a house fire.

We know, because we were standing around gawking at the Third and Lincoln street fire when there was a sharp report. A state policeman came along and told us that there was ammunition exploding in there, and we ought to get back.

We got back—clear back to the office, in fact.

LUMBER MILLS FEEL SHORTAGE OF LABOR HERE

With many lumber workers turning to farm work, the labor shortage in local lumber mills threatens to become worse. Mills not only in Klamath Falls but throughout the state are suffering from serious labor shortage which, if it continues, may cripple the industry.

One of the things causing the shortage of workers is men leaving the mills to work on farms or ranches because of higher wages offered in farm work. Also, top skilled men and younger men usually interested in learning the various lumber jobs have been taken by the armed forces. One other cause for the shortage is the lack of housing here. Many skilled men have been lost to the community because they were unable to find houses or rooms.

The mills are being forced by the labor situation to curtail their output by running fewer shifts. In some of the mills, skilled hands are moved from one machine to another in an effort to keep the mill going, which means some machines or plants must be left idle.

"I was in hopes that the returning servicemen would take up the slack but we don't seem to be getting enough for them to do this," said George Misfeldt, logging and lumber placement officer of the employment service. In Klamath Falls, approximately 30 to 35 servicemen a month are returning to civilian life but this will only be about enough to offset the return to school this fall of school children who are now working.

TO REBUILD MILL

MOLALLA, July 24 (AP)—The Lowes lumber mill here will be rebuilt and operating within 40 days, Owner A. F. Lowes said today after fire Sunday destroyed the $70,000 property. He said he had purchased another sawmill and rebuilding will begin immediately.

Two Injured In Saturday Wreck

Ben Lower, 60, and Cora Reed, 40, were injured Saturday at 10:30 p. m. about three miles south of Klamath Falls on highway 97 when their car was sideswiped by a truck, according to an accident report.

The driver of the approaching truck did not dim his lights and edged over the middle of the highway, striking the other car. Lower was driving the car and Reed was a passenger, the report stated.

The driver of the truck was not known and the car driven by Lower was severely damaged.

FREE CHEST X-RAYS STILL OFFERED HERE

Enrollments for Klamath Falls are still not filled for the free X-rays to be given when the large mobile chest X-ray unit rolls into the city on August 6, according to the office of the Klamath county public health department in the courthouse.

The unit, owned by the Oregon Tuberculosis association, will start its tour through Klamath county this Friday when it stops at Bly. On Saturday, July 28, the unit will be at Sprague River. A new committee, under the direction of Mrs. Ann Carter, is making arrangements there.

A total of 300 X-rays a day can be handled by the unit which was purchased from funds of the Tuberculosis Christmas seal sales.

Those wishing the free X-rays are asked to drop a postcard with their name, address, and the date to the Klamath county public health office in room five of the courthouse.

Equestrians Enjoy Moonlight Ride

A moonlight horseback ride was enjoyed by about 40 persons Monday evening when the group left from the barns at the Sunset riding stables and rode to the Red Rock tavern, a distance of about eight miles.

At this point the group enjoyed refreshments and dancing to accordion music and started back to town about midnight.

FOOD FREEZING DISCUSSED AT CANNING CLASS

Demonstrating food freezing methods, Thomas Onsdorff, associate professor of foods industry department of Oregon State college, conducted the first in a series of home food preservation classes at the Pelican theatre at 9:30 Monday morning. Onsdorff showed examples of food frozen at the college to the 200 people attending. Besides meat and vegetables there were berries frozen in 1938 which were still edible. Using beans, he also demonstrated blanching and packing processes.

Onsdorff, who was introduced by Mrs. Winnifred Gillen, chairman of the Klamath County Nutrition council, stated that Oregon and Washington were pioneers in the freezing industry, as the first commercial plants were located in these states. Some of the greatest advances in the scientific method of freezing foods were also made in Oregon and Washington.

Stating that Oregon families have not made as good a use of their lockers as the average family in the United States, he pointed out that the average Oregon family uses the locker for 350 pounds of food a year while the average family of four uses 1000 pounds of food a year from their locker.

The widespread use of the private home freezing units and lockers will not put the commercial operators out of business, he said, because these companies offer services which are not practical to do at home because they take too much time and equipment.

Other home canning classes will be held Wednesday and Thursday from 9:30 to 11 a. m. These classes will be conducted by Mrs. Vivian Freeman, a canning expert from Portland, and are open to anyone interested in attending. They are sponsored by the Klamath Nutrition council.

The last load of equipment was parachuted to the U. S. forest service fire lookout on Brown mountain, west of Lake o' the Woods, early this morning.

Some 60-odd bundles have been dropped intermittently for three days, until the stove, radio, fire-finding instruments, tents and bedding for the camp were delivered.

The work of setting up the lookout on Brown, which started with a load of lumber being parachuted down July 12, has been delayed because bad fire conditions required the service of the plane which was used to drop supplies.

Ten men were dispatched to hike in over the rugged trail to collect and pack off chutes and rigging.

WRA Employs Evacuee Workers

TULELAKE—Evacuee workers employed on June 30, 1945, totaled 5422, according to figures released by the payroll unit of WRA this week. The new figure represented an increase of 172 from the April total.

Of this number, 205 were employed in general project management; 2770, administrative management; 1512, operations; 935, community management. These are assisting in legal reports, block manager headquarters, relocation, office services, personnel management, procurement, postal service, mess operations, finance, property control, evacuee property, engineering, agriculture, motor transportation, fire protection, education, health, welfare, internal security, community activities, community analysis and business enterprise.

We are told of a place that is paved with good intentions and yet continually swept by fire. Many bare hills here in Oregon are constant reminders that we should be safe by being sure that the last spark is out before we leave any fire. Keep Oregon Green.
