Custodian, Lava Beds National Monument

Editor's Note: Don Fisher, custodian of the Lava Beds National Monument and a local historian, has suggested that 1946 be observed in this area as the South Road Anniversary year...

KENTUCKY pays homage to its pathfinder, Daniel Boone, the Northwest Territory to George Rogers Clark, and it has been suggested that the Klamath basin do the same to the pioneers who located the South Emigrant road...

A party of pioneers under the leadership of Levi Scott and having as members, two men, who later had much to do with the development of the Klamath and Tule Lake regions...

These men, living near the present site of Dallas, Oregon, decided to find a route into the Oregon country that would not be under the control of the British.

Leaving La Creole, Oregon, on June 20, 1846, the party traveled south and camped on the night of June 29, 1846, on a stream now known as Emigrant creek...

Early on the morning of June 30, the party left the California trail and proceeded eastward. They ascended the mountains (now known as Green Springs) and after reaching the summit spent the remainder of the day examining the hills along Keene creek...

EARLY the next morning, (July 1, 1846) the party proceeded eastward. The tracks of a horse were discovered, having been made in the spring when the ground was wet. As the horse had been traveling east, the party followed, feeling that it would show a route across the mountains...

The next day, the men, following the ridge further north than they had on July 1, succeeded in finding a crossing. That night the party camped at a place now known as Long Prairie.

On July 4, they followed along a ridge in a northerly direction and upon reaching the summit descended to the Klamath river. They followed the stream for a distance of about six miles when the first view of the Klamath basin was observed.

FOLLOWING the river to the point where it left Lower Klamath lake, the party came to a riffle. William Parker volunteered to try to cross. The ford was very rocky and the water swift but the entire party crossed safely.

The next morning the party proceeded along the lake shore in a cautious manner as they were aware that the Indians were watching them closely. Smoke signals on all sides kept the Indians advised of the progress being made by Scott and his party.

Early on July 6, the party ascended a high ridge to the east and observed a large lake—perhaps 20 miles in length (Tule lake). From the summit, the men could see a timbered butte beyond and east of the far side of the lake.

Descending the ridge, the party soon found themselves in the midst of an extremely rough country. Short lava ridges extended in every direction (probably Lava Beds National monument).

With the arrival of Goff, the party proceeded eastward but soon reached the bank of a small river (Lost river). The stream was so deep and the banks so perpendicular that the party could not cross. The men began to travel up stream. They had proceeded but a short distance when an Indian was observed trying to hide in the tules. The redman was informed by signs that the party desired to cross the stream. The Indian replied, by signs, that there was a crossing further up stream. The Indian was persuaded to lead the party to the crossing (at the present reclamation dam near Merrill). Here the party after many presents to their guide, crossed and then proceeded a short distance and camped. The next morning (July 7) the party left the lake and proceeded eastward across a very rocky table land...

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3—One senator leaped up during the peace charter debate and protested the dull harmony, urging some opponents to start a fight about something, in order to bestir headlines, saying he was suspicious of the quality of the peace arrangement because opposition was inconsequential. He was only half-obliged by Senator Wheeler, who pointed to the interpretation which the state department had allowed to grow into a general accented conclusion, that use of troops to keep the peace would require two thirds ratification by the senate as a new treaty upon each occasion.

Disappointment

NATURALLY it's a keen disappointment that out of 6000 words devoted to the communique, the conferees couldn't find a half dozen to tell us what the sphinx of Moscow has in his mind regarding Japan. However, it really would have been surprising if a statement had been made in this matter. If Russia isn't going to war against Nippon, it would be wise to tell Tokyo that now. And if the soviet is going to join the conflict, it wouldn't be smart to advertise it in advance. Anyway, we have the right to believe that things will work out well.

Poland Prize

ANOTHER striking item is the temporary territorial award to Poland. Pending a final adjustment, the Poles are given the rich German territory east of the Oder river line and a large section of East Prussia. If this is confirmed, it will mean that Poland will become one of the great European powers. It can reach the skies, what with its agricultural and industrial possibilities and great Baltic ports through which it can pour its products to the world at large.

Big Five

BEHIND the peace formula is the primary assumption that Britain and the United States would work in unison to maintain its aims. Administration of it is to be in the hands of a Big Five. If a British policy of collaboration with Russia's political aims is followed by a communist victory in France, the calculated council balance upon which we are entering the peace will have been upset. We would then have the backing of China—China, where General Chiang Kai-shek is flanked by a communist army.

Friendly Helpfulness

The voting on war, peace and other matters is to be done by a majority of seven on the 11-nation security council, six members of which are chosen from the small nations. A switch of Greece and Spain to Russian collaboration will require Mr. Stettinius to look hard outside this hemisphere for small-nation votes which will maintain his influence in the security council, the influence which brought the formula into being.

The War Today

By DeWITT MACKENZIE Associated Press War Analyst

THE number one point of significance in connection with the historic Big Three communique of Potsdam, as I see it, lies in the fact that the statement could be made at all.

This is to say, the outstanding feature is that the three statesmen were able to reach an accord in what must have been by far the most delicate and difficult conference of the American-British-Russian partnership. The demands of war had oiled the wheels of previous parleys, but this meeting dealt with urgent postwar problems which most certainly would produce a divergence of views on some vital questions. And still we have unity. Therefore, as the most important paragraph of the lengthy communique, I give you this:

"President Truman, Generalissimo Stalin and Prime Minister Attlee leave this conference, which has strengthened the ties between the three governments and extended the scope of their collaboration and understanding, with renewed confidence that their governments and peoples, together with the other United Nations, will ensure the creation of a just and enduring peace."

Now, of course, one swallow doesn't make a summer, and one love feast doesn't necessarily guarantee a continuance of accord. Still, it's great news that the Big Three have negotiated a dangerous course so well.
