Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

THE news from Washington, where west coast lumber industry wage problems have been the subject of a hearing, indicates that labor and management will be asked to settle the questions between them on their own.

EPLEY

This would seem to dampen the hope that a government agency may bring about early settlement of the Klamath Falls strike, one of the most serious work stoppages to affect the industry here in all its history.

This new attitude of WLB toward labor problems has come with the end of the war, which occurred after the Klamath strike started.

It appears that we are going to have to look to labor and management to work the thing out here if at all possible. Needless to say, the fact the men are off the job presents an obstacle to friendly feeling as the need rises for cooperative effort.

The local strike began while the war was still on. It appeared likely at that time that there would be definite government action, even to the extent that the army might step in to maintain production of critical war material.

Now the whole situation has changed. It would now seem advisable for all parties concerned to take the necessary steps that are preliminary to across-the-table discussion of whatever issues are involved.

Censorship Lifted

ONE of the pleasant things that happened with the end of the war was the lifting of the code of voluntary censorship that prevailed throughout the war period. Byron Price, who did a grand job as head of the office of censorship, lost his job just after surrender, and he no doubt is glad of it.

Price was an old AP man. The press had confidence in him, and he personally can take a lot of credit for the general success of the voluntary censorship plan.

Under this program, a code was drawn up which listed the material which should not be carried in the press because of reasons of military security. Newspapers were asked to refrain voluntarily from violating the code.

In general, it worked out. There were some mistakes in the code itself—the Jap balloon censorship, for instance—but as a whole the plan proved effective, and we do not believe there were any military disasters of any kind because of violations. Newspapers, magazines and radio stations and chains which cooperated have reason to be proud.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22—The drive of the spenders to stampede congress with depression pressure publicity is not making much headway yet. A couple of rather influential administration senators have talked around among their colleagues and reached two conclusions, (1) congress is apt to be tighter than before about money, and (2) the government just simply cannot provide everyone with a job, or the job he wants at the pay he wants.

• • • •

LaGuardia Warns

BEHIND this resistance to the depression wolf-cry is a situation becoming increasingly plain even in the front page news. Mayor LaGuardia flailed the microphone the other day, for instance, with some cyclonic contentions that we are heading for a terrific unemployment, depression and what not from cancellation of war contracts, unless congress immediately does something—and he knew what had to be done, specifying more appropriations for bigger public works, including $1,250,000,000 of them in his own pocket. He also gave some financial advice, based on his inside information from the financial district that bondholders were dumping government securities.

The outside information from the financial district in the same newspapers a few pages away from LaGuardia gave not the slightest hint of depression. People who had their money, including life savings in stocks, were not selling them. Prices were not depressed, although the owners had heard the line offered by LaGuardia, not only for weeks, but all during the latter years of the war.

Survey Reveals Facts

AN exceptionally responsible financial authority, the committee for economic development, set forth simultaneously the result of a survey of industries, predicting only 552,000 persons able and willing to work would be unemployed, and employment in the country would total 53,448,000 the first full year—practically the 60,000,000 jobs Mr. Roosevelt wanted, if you consider the men left in the armed services.

The spenders thus are having a difficult time trying to make out the hopeless case necessary to get themselves more free government money. LaGuardia further claimed "congress has done nothing," a claim any congressman can explode to full ridiculousness by adding up the $27,200,000,000 in the spending program already authorized mainly by them (see yesterday's column), a total three times the height of the Roosevelt free spending programs, when the federal debt was a small fraction of the $265,000,000,000 it was at the close of the war (including army-navy allowances, public works, food control, state unemployment compensation funds, lend-lease, export-import bank, etc.) the wilting little flower who apparently is generating some hopes for personal but not a patriotic national revival also admonished citizens not to spend their money—and thus furnish jobs—but to keep their bonds and buy as little as possible. This seems to be a defeatist policy generated by motives beyond my imagination or ability to reason. That kind of advice would force people out of jobs and create unemployment. To do that would scuttle the economic equilibrium of the country. Is LaGuardia so eager for more federal money that he wants a depression to get it?

If there is to be unemployment, LaGuardia should be required to say where is all that money collected from the people in New York through the sales tax for the specific purpose of unemployment compensation—collected all during the war when labor scarcities prevailed. (State unemployment compensation funds are now $6,000,000,000.)

LaGuardia wears quite a big hat. If congress would require him to put into it a small piece of paper representing a million dollars for all the money authorized in postwar economic spending to date, he would have to buy a hat factory to accommodate the million dollar bills.

Congress Resists Demands

THESE facts are perceived by quite a few congressmen and have built the strong resistance to the demands for even more money, demands which have their origin among CIO economists who are still in their own grooves of always depressed thought. Unless they can organize a political movement to sweep congress off its feet and make it forget what it knows about what it has done, and blind itself to the facts and figures being published, and get the stock market to collapse, there will be a strong fight over spending with the outcome in grave doubt.

Senators Wagner and Murray, (who are not the two unidentified senators quoted at the outset, but generally working along the CIO road with LaGuardia), came out of a White House conference saying Mr. Truman favored their bill to give every man a government job if he does not find another one (cost unestimated) and boost the unemployment compensation. However, other senators say privately Mr. Truman inherited this program from Mr. Roosevelt and thought he should go along with it. They noted that so far he has not however joined the LaGuardia-CIO depression stampede.

Consequently it may be wise to await developments.

The War Today

By DeWITT MacKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

British Foreign Secretary Bevin's pronouncement of policy rounds out the preview of what we may expect from England's new socialist government, and in these early stages we find it moving along a line not very far "left" of center, thus confounding those prophets who expected a radical upheaval.

MacKENZIE

A striking feature of Bevin's speech in commons was that it echoed the policies of the late conservative government under Winston Churchill. Indeed, the conservative members of parliament not only gave a warm demonstration of approval but aristocratic Former Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden congratulated Bevin and placed the conservative seal of approval on the socialist declaration. And so we have further backing for the tradition that Britain's foreign policy remains fundamentally the same, no matter what party is in power.

Even more illuminating was Socialist Bevin's stand against "totalitarianism." Referring to the countries of Europe which "have been imbued with the diabolical ideas of nazism," he declared that as new governments are elected there is one thing "we must aim at resolutely even at the beginning, and that is to prevent the substitution of one form of totalitarianism for another."

Specifically, he said of Bulgaria, Romania and Hungary (which are in the Russian sphere of influence) that "the governments which have been set up do not in our view represent the majority of the people, and the impression we get from recent developments is that one kind of totalitarianism is being replaced by another."

Moderate Group

So England's sensational new government is setting out as a moderate institution which is well inside both the extremists of the "right" and those of the "left." And here it's well to note that an extreme conservative is "radical" just as is an extreme socialist.

This tendency of the socialist government isn't surprising to those who know Britain well. There are comparatively few extreme "leftists." England always has been conservative, but during the last quarter century there has been a steady swing towards moderate socialism that finally has resulted in the present government which comprises representatives of all classes of society.

Limited Program

Accordingly we see the regime under Prime Minister Attlee embarking on a limited program of nationalization, with strong indications that private initiative will be encouraged. In short, there is to be no wholesale change in Britain's economic structure now.

Some members of the party like Prof. Harold Laski, who represents intellectual socialism, may have far-reaching changes in mind. But the rank and file are concerned with the immediate problems of life and aren't shooting at the stars. The government program calls for nationalization of the Bank of England, the coal mines and transportation, but the signs are that this will represent most of the nationalization in the life of the present parliament, which normally would be five years.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Songs for a Better World

We were sitting around the embers of Ed Crumpit's barbecue last Saturday night, finishing our beer and hot dogs, while Ed strummed the guitar ... picking out old, friendly songs.

Soon everyone was singing. The harmony wasn't too good ... but the spirit was—a spirit of friendship and good humor.

And it made me think how music—music of the people—overcomes barriers of prejudice and intolerance. A Yankee folksong or an English carol or a Southern melody—they all speak a common language of the heart ... bind folks together ... help us forget our grudges.

From where I sit, music can help to make the whole world kin. Maybe we ought to have a lot more of it ... informal sings around the fire, and in the home. And it's sure true that a mellow glass of beer fits into the picture. It just naturally goes with that kind of music.
