the advance group in preparing Atsugi for the general arrival—the setting up of communications with the Okinawa staging area and making as safe as possible the comparatively short runways. Only two runways—5600 and 5100 feet—are currently usable and none too long for the giant C-54 Skymasters and other troop transports.

Formal Entry Told
Thursday, when preparations are complete, MacArthur will leave the Okinawa staging area for the formal entry into Japan. About that time he is landing at Atsugi, his schedule calls for 10,000 marines and navy personnel to begin occupation of Yokosuka, Japan's second largest naval base, off which the advance units of the third fleet anchored today.

Guards for Base
At noon today Rear Adm. Oscar C. Badger, aboard his flagship, the light anti-aircraft cruiser San Diego, steamed through Uruga strait into Tokyo bay. He led a small force of 10 ships, plus minesweepers. The destroyer-transport Gosselin carried marines to land on three small islands guarding Yokosuka naval base to make certain they had been totally immobilized in conformance with Admiral Halsey's instructions. Other ships in Badger's force included the destroyers Wedderburn, Twinning, Yarnall and Gardiner's Bay. Badger's force, with a Japanese harbor pilot aboard each ship, carefully wended its way through 23-mile-wide Uruga strait, until recently the most heavily mined stretch of water in the world. A U. S. minesweeper swept up and destroyed one mine, without damage to any ships.

Among those accompanying Taylor to the White House were T. O. Krabbel, national rehabilitation director and William T. Comer, chairman of the veterans' preference committee.

As the navy set out to return 2,839,000 men and women to civilian status within a year, Maj. Gen. I. W. Edwards, assistant chief of staff, told the house military committee that the army will be reduced from 8,000,000 to 2,500,000 men by next July 1.

and the Chamber of Deputies, and the Quai d'Orsay and farther on down the Eiffel Tower on the left bank. From the air the Eiffel tower looks like a heap of old rusty scrap iron, and you are amazed that night to see it lighted up and looking as if it has been newly painted with aluminum paint.

Under your eyes are Notre Dame and the Place Vendome, and the Avenue des Champs Elysee with its Arc de Triomphe at the Place d'Etoile and on out the Bois de Boulogne—all clearly recognizable from the pictures with which you have been familiar since childhood.

THEY all look so close together. You think to yourself: "Shucks, I can get out in the morning and see all these things on my own two feet and the heck with cab drivers and such." When you try it, as soon as you get a little time to spare, you get a shock. Distances are deceiving from up in the air.

But Paris is a convenient city to see. Its great monuments of history and of beauty are conveniently bunched, so that if you will use discretion—AND the convenient and amazingly understandable subway—you will be able to see the bulk of it before your feet give out.

Walking is after all the only way to see any city that is worth seeing. If you try to get whisked around on wheels, you'll come away with nothing more than a vague and confused jumble in your mind.

BESIDES, in these days, walking is the ONLY way to see Paris—with, that is, the incidental help of the subway, which will bring you back when your feet play out—for cabs are OUT (no petrol for the few that are left in running condition) and other than those run by the Red Cross and other organizations for the thousands of soldiers here on leave, there are no bus tours. It's your own two feet or not at all.

BY present air facilities, downtown Paris is about four hours distant from downtown London. It takes about an hour to get from the center of London to the airport and get going, about two hours to make the actual trip and about another hour to get from the airport to downtown Paris.

This will doubtless be speeded up considerably when private traffic gets under way and fully organized.

"There also was a press relations officer, Toshiro Shimanouchi, who was reportedly graduated from Occidental college, Los Angeles, and Stanford university.

"While we were there a Russian who had been interned arrived at the field in full uniform. He was Commodore Anatoliy Rdonov, naval attache. With him was K. Samoloff, representative of Tass soviet news agency.

"We were taken on a tour of facilities and the Jap general was apologetic because the plumbing would not work in one of the buildings.

"One of the Jap officers seemed concerned about the social status after occupation," McDowell interposed. "He asked me if I thought that Americans and Japs would be allowed to intermingle and we got to know each other after occupation."

HERO OF CORREGIDOR RELEASED BY JAPS

mobile he carried the picture in his hands and every now and then glanced at it. Gen. Wainwright had been found safe and well by a parachute team of Americans at a Japanese prison camp deep in Manchuria earlier this month.

Hundreds Released
In addition hundreds of other American prisoners of war, including Maj. Gen. George M. Parker Jr., Portland, Ore., who served under Wainwright in the Philippines, were released.

Wainwright was a prisoner of the Japanese for three years and three months. Corregidor fell May 6, 1942.

Mercy Teams
The parachute mercy teams which dropped near the camp at other Japanese prison camps where Wainwright was held and in Manchuria and northern China took food and medical supplies to the hundreds of allied prisoners.

Since his surrender to the Japanese on Corregidor, Wainwright had been variously reported at prison camps in Formosa and Manchuria.

Gen. Wainwright took command in the Philippines in March, 1942, after Gen. MacArthur had been ordered to Australia to become supreme allied commander in the Southwest Pacific.

Wainwright was born at Walla Walla, Wash., August 23, 1883. He was graduated from the United States military academy in 1906 as a second lieutenant of cavalry. He was given the temporary rank of lieutenant general when he succeeded MacArthur. His permanent rank is major general.

100 Acres Of Timber Burned by Spot Fire

Fire crews were out Tuesday at a spot fire which had started from the brush fire near Sand creek on the Klamath Indian reservation.

Men at Klamath Agency said that the fire was not serious. The fire, which started Sunday at Lenz on the Klamath marsh, was being mopped up today. The blaze was in a dense stand of lodge pole pine and destroyed about 100 acres of the timber before being brought under control.

Meetings were held two weeks prior to April 19. Waits declared, in regard to wage raises and the last meeting was held Sunday, Monday, August 27, was set as the deadline for granting the pay increase demand.

Temporary Agreements
He also said that the Plumbers and Steamfitters have received no increase since January 1, 1942. The present agreements with local shops are only temporary, he said, pending the decision of the two hold-out shops.

A master's agreement involving all shops concerned is the aim of the union, he said.

Coyotes Make Cattle Trip Hazardous, Rancher Reports

HEPPNER, Ore., Aug. 28 (AP)—Rancher Jack Vaughn, one of the few cattlemen of the west who still rides herd with his cowhands driving his stock to shipping points, said today he doubts he'll ride cow-trail much longer.

Vaughn drove 11 carloads of cattle here for shipment to the Portland stockyards on the central Oregon cow-trail he has ridden for many years.

The veteran rancher said the cowboys had a hard week-long trip because of the many coyotes roaming the open range in the Sunflower flint. The prey-ing beasts kept scattering the cattle at night and the "hands" from getting their sleep, he said.

He is being held here and will later be transferred to the Multnomah county jail, Thomas stated.
