USES SOLVES PROBLEMS, GET JOBS FOR VETS

Answering all types of questions from "Where can I get a divorce?" to "Can I be re-inducted?", the veterans' representative in the U. S. employment service and veterans administration in Klamath Falls help returning veterans settle problems and find jobs.

All discharged veterans coming into the employment office are assisted in locating a job in the line of work they prefer. The majority, according to Les Finley, veterans' representative, are interested in finding permanent jobs although a few veterans want to return to school. One veteran, recently returned from overseas, wants to work at Crater lake and complete his high school education at KUHS, while another one plans to finish college.

Veteran Assistance
So far this month, 25 veterans have been assisted, although the number handled each month averages about 32. With the increase of discharged servicemen arriving in the United States every day, Finley stated that additional personnel may have to be added to carry out the local program.

Most of these men were here before the war, but according to Finley, quite a number of the veterans are non-local men who have relatives living here or have come to Klamath Falls because they liked it when they were passing through here with other troops.

Legal Advice
The work of Pat Kilby, head of the local veterans administration, is to help veterans handle legal matters in the period of readjustment to civilian life. The office takes care of insurance issued to servicemen, and education, vocational and rehabilitation training for returned veterans who are eligible under the laws administered by the veterans bureau. Other work includes issuing of disability pensions, settling of insurance claims, handling of all hospitalization, and the granting of loans under the GI bill of rights.

350 Problems Monthly
The local office handles about 350 veterans each month, including dependents. Kilby finds that most of the veterans wishing to complete their education are single men, while men with families are interested in vocational training. The married veterans all seem to have a definite obligation to his dependents, Kilby said.

Most of the discharged servicemen plan on joining service organizations like the American Legion or the VFW. Many veterans, having definite ideas about what they want, desire to own their own business and home.

Main Interests
Of the veterans returning to Klamath Falls, quite a large percentage of them are interested in going into the restaurant business, while a comparatively small number want to take up farming. Even fewer want jobs as salesmen.

Alterations Seen
Kilby stated that many of the veterans' laws will be made more flexible to fit the influx of discharged servicemen, due to new hospital facilities being built and enlarged in various cities. Also scheduled for some alterations will be the GI bill of rights as actual work with the laws shows the need for changes.

RESEEDING TOLD
GRANTS PASS, Ore., Aug. 28 (AP)—Burned over acreage in this area will be reseeded by airplane next month. Harry McFarland of the Rogue air service said today. Sheep and cattle-men will finance the seeding program.

Marines Prepare Vets For Return To Civilian Life

It is no military secret that the marine corps during the past 24 months has planned, organized and put into effective operation a rehabilitation program. The term "rehabilitation" in this sense means the transition from military to civilian life.

If we are to avoid the tragic spectacle of men returned to civil life, cynical, disillusioned and maladjusted to society, we must give to the discharge procedure the same dignity which accompanies entry into the service.

As soon as it is known that a marine is to be discharged, he is given one or more pre-discharge interviews by the rehabilitation specialists. The interview itself is made up of two parts. The first part is mandatory and during this phase the interviewer explains to the prospective dischargee his rights and benefits. In the second part of the interview any problems which the prospective dischargee may have are discussed and solutions suggested. These problems are of various types and are usually personal in nature—employment problems, family problems, etc.

After discharge, the district rehabilitation office in the veteran's home area contacts him for the purpose of following up the pre-discharge interviews and to determine whether or not the man is "squared away" as a civilian. Three months later, a follow-up card is sent out from headquarters, U. S. marine corps, to ascertain the man's well-being in his newly acquired status. When it is indicated that a man has successfully completed his readjustment to civil life, a report of this fact is forwarded to headquarters, U. S. marine corps, for file in his permanent record.

It is the intention of the marine corps to see to it that no man is separated from the service to which he has given full measure of faithful devotion without a personal interview.

with one in the uniform of his service, specially trained and competent to advise him regarding his problems of personal or economic adjustment. The marine corps is determined to assist its men and women to gain a sound footing on the way back.

ENLISTMENT URGED IN REGULAR NAVY

Limited quota navy enlistments are still in effect, enlisting 17-year-olds. Al C. Friesen, chief recruiting officer of the Klamath navy recruiting substitution, said today.

Regular navy applications are given preference over navy reserve. Radio technicians and air crewmen are now enlisted in the regular navy.

Since January 1, 1945, 156 applications have been received at the local recruiting office. One hundred twenty-three of the applicants have been enlisted in the regular navy and the navy reserve. The 33 applicants who were rejected were disqualified on defective vision, heart ailments including fast pulse and high blood pressure, flat feet and immaturity.

Navy enlistments have been on a limited quota basis for the past six months, Friesen pointed out, and said no more applications for service in the WAVES have been taken since the close of war in the Pacific.
