An interview it appeared to him that the legislation "will be cut to shreds." He added that although most democrats would support some items in the bill, enough would join the unified republicans on most issues to make an administration defeat certain.

GOP members of the committee disclosed to a reporter that they would agree to a single major provision of the senate version. It is one to provide jobless benefits to 2,900,000 federal employees not now covered by unemployment compensation.

1. Assuring jobless payments at state rates in every state for 26 weeks.
2. Allowing up to $200 to send a displaced war worker back home, or to a new job.

hauser. It is certified by the NLRB and has a separate contract with Weyerhaeuser. State police, who came here on a precautionary measure when trouble threatened on the Weyerhaeuser road, returned to their regular beats over the weekend. The state police at no time went on the picket line to police it and they did not "scatter pickets" as was erroneously reported in some quarters. They parked in cars close to the line at the request of Sheriff Lloyd Low, who said he needed additional help in case of trouble when the AFL machinists went through.

support, to block senate action on the nomination of Dean G. Acheson as under secretary of state.

The senate voted, 66 to 12, against delaying action and then confirmed Acheson.

Approval was by a 69 to 1 vote with Wherry casting the lone ballot against confirmation. Wherry told the senate they could look at "the liberal press or as some may call it the radical or communist press" to verify his assertion. He mentioned the Daily Worker and PM by name. The Nebraskan, who charged last week that Acheson had "insulted" MacArthur, moved to send the appointment back to the foreign relations committee. The committee previously had approved it unanimously.

If he is the only one so recorded, Wherry said, he wants the record to show that "I did not support Mr. Acheson."

Firemen Extinguish Small Blaze Here

Logging company to consider strike settlement.

CIO officials will meet with the employees, but management will not be represented. The Weyerhaeuser meeting will be held at 1:30 p. m. Tuesday; Ewauna and Bly Logging, 4 p. m.; Kesterson, 7:30 p. m. Virgil Burtz, international vice president of the IWA-CIO, and George Brown, international organizer, were here today. Meetings were held in Portland in connection with the local trouble, but no press statement was made afterwards.

CIO Vote

A further complication in the confused lumber picture is the fact that the CIO officials will meet in Portland Wednesday to consider a strike ballot which supports the IWA demands for a 25-cent hourly wage increase. If there is an industry-wide CIO strike, it is presumed that it will absorb any local strike and stop work in CIO operations which have resumed operations.

Yesterday's meeting of the AFL district council was held at the Eagles hall with all areas represented, according to Hugh Haddock, AFL union agent. Haddock said the agreement was unanimous to give the council authority to strike, and the strike was called. He said that it is possible some operations might have started up today, but that all would be down by night. There was a report some AFL Lakeview mills were running.

Here is a list of the AFL operations under the Klamath basin district council:

- Big Lakes Box company mill, Klamath Falls.
- Cabax Mill Nos. 1 and 2, Cave Junction. (Two mill operations.)

2 ESCAPE IN JURY IN AUTO ACCIDENT

State Wood Fuel Situation Serious

PORTLAND, Sept. 24 (AP)—With cold weather rapidly approaching, the state's wood fuel situation is serious, members of the Oregon Fuel Merchants' association said today.

In view of this morning's lumber strike, the group called a special emergency session late this afternoon, but did not announce how many fuel firms the strike would close.

Sawdust, with which one-fourth of Portland's families heat their homes, will be available for only a few more days, as it has been hauled from mills rapidly in response to fuel merchants' "store fuel early" campaign. Many homes are well supplied.

The wood fuel situation is even more serious. More than one-third of Portland homes are heated in this manner. Wood dealers said they feared a prolonged strike also might bring about a coal shortage.

his guide led him to another seeming rubble heap, and into a door, where people were passing back and forth in considerable numbers, and so to a good sized STORE in the interior of what had appeared to be only a storeroom high pile of wreckage.

Here he found the girl he was seeking. The store carried a varied and quite sizable stock of goods and seemed to be doing an active business. Eventually, this man found EVERY person he had been asked to look up.

THIS incident is interesting and perhaps significant because it discloses how German people are living and carrying on.

These words are written in a large German hotel that has been requisitioned by our army for billeting use. It is fairly whole, but all around it are other hotels that seem from the street to be only the now familiar rubble heaps. Yet from a window that looks across an alley this writer can see a section of the adjoining building whose sturdy construction has held up the wreckage of the upper stories. All the windows are shattered of course, and through these windows you can see floors littered with the plaster that has fallen from the ceilings.

But a number of the windows have been filled in with plaster board, pieces of old packing boxes, etc., and here and there a scrap of salvaged glass to admit a little light. Through holes cut in the boards stove pipes protrude and at meal times smoke comes from these improvised chimneys. At times one catches a glimpse of the families carrying on the business of living inside.

All this, you must remember, is one of the worst-bombed areas of one of Germany's hardest-bombed industrial cities. THESE minor incidents are related at considerable length here in order to make it clear why at a casual glance you can't estimate Germany's present state.

Indeed, you find your first fleeting impressions almost universally misleading and catch yourself constantly revising your earlier judgments. But this writer is prepared already to say that, given the proper incentives, Germany can be rather quickly restored.

WHAT would be such an incentive?

Well, desire for vengeance COULD be. Such a desire is WHOLLY NORMAL in a virile people, such as the Germans unquestionably are, who have been just defeated in war. History leaves us no room for doubt on that point. Our job, in the American-occupied area, is to provide a BETTER incentive than that. But we mustn't kid ourselves. It's a big job. This writer is pretty sure that even our best people here don't know yet EXACTLY how to go about it. Maybe it all looks perfectly clear and plain back home, but here on the ground it's still fuzzy in its outlines.

buildings—objected to a war labor board award, contending that under its terms workers in office buildings and lofts would undergo a reduction in pay. The WLB had granted a $2.50 weekly raise to apartment house employees and had reduced the hours of other such employees.

WLB Rejects

The WLB also rejected demands for union security, severance, holiday and vacation provisions.

Other disputes were unchanged, the only notable event coming when Chrysler Corp. announced a conference tomorrow with officials of the sprawling CIO United Automobile Workers Union on the latter's demand for a 30 per cent wage increase.

Strike Votes

Strike votes were in the picture at both Ford and General Motors, the other two members of the Big Three. More than 100,000 in the Detroit area are idle as a result of automotive idleness.

The CIO's International Oil Workers followed the UAW lead in demanding a 30 per cent pay boost, and informal gas rationing was instituted to conserve supplies. A conference was planned for tomorrow between industry and union representatives to attempt a settlement.

One of the largest single disputes—38,000 out—remained in the plants of the Westinghouse electric company over six states. Demands therein focused on bonus and incentive pay rates.
