THOSE TINTED FINGER NAILS
By EARL WHITLOCK

It does seem as if the ultimate must have come out of the beauty laboratories in the matter of the adornment of the feminine finger tip. And, over the past dozen years, it has been interesting to watch the progress from the delicate tints—worn with great trepidation some years ago—to the present-day bolder and badder colors—(I'm sure I do not know their names, but they are decidedly alluring). And, from the time spent by the ladies in applying and then removing and changing these variously colored goos, there must be a great fascination in the process and in the results obtained.

But I have been thinking back and, while the present fad is much more colorful, you will have to admit that the fashion which we used to affect when we were kids—that bold, black border at the extreme tip of the finger—that was a nifty and striking thing. Easily acquired, too, and as I remember, amazingly hard to remove.

Next Monday Mr. Whitlock of the Earl Whitlock Funeral Home will comment on "The Deadline Is October 15th."

Mill And Inventor

This is one of the two-operation sawmills invented by Charles R. "Machinery" Potts, which has been delivered to Cave Junction. The machine is the twelfth to be put in operation by the Klamath man.

One-Unit, Two-Operation Sawmill Made By KF Man

Charles R. Potts, Klamath inventor, announced this week that he had made delivery of a one-unit, two-operation sawmill to Cave Junction.

This is the twelfth mill to be completed since Potts built the first such mill in 1934.

Advantages of the mill are four-fold, Potts explained. The mill performs two operations in one job, it requires only five men to operate the mill—approximately one-fourth the number needed in other methods; the mill can be loaded on a truck and moved to another location with facility, and the size of the mill requires but little space.

Thirty thousand board feet of lumber can be sawed and edged in the same operation with the new machine in an eight-hour day, employing only five men to operate. In other methods the two operations of sawing and edging lumber are separate, and between 16 and 20 men are employed to handle the work.

All-Steel
The new sawmill is all-steel and only requires a 48-foot platform. Old mills have wooden frames that are built on 90-foot platforms, and have to be erected from the platform up, every time milling operations are moved to a new location.

"Machinery" Potts started pottering with the idea of the one-unit all-steel sawing and edging mill in 1930, and in 1934 the first one was set up in Little valley. It was moved from differing from the one for Cave Junction which has a veritable belt feed.

Different Plan
Ordinary mills have a different hookup on the top saw-drive, and there is a difference in the way the belt is laced on pulleys, Marvin Crank, machinist employed by Potts, explained. Potts' mill has a "nigger" to turn the logs in place of the canthook and turn-down man used by little milling operations. His sawmills can be operated by either diesel power or electricity.

Labor Limited
Steel parts have been hard to get during the war and it has been necessary to create them out of steel by hand and make them over to fit particular needs. Labor has been limited in this work, too, with mechanics in demand for the service. Potts' two sons are in the armed forces, and he has been working with a four-man crew. Crank has worked with him off and on since 1934 and operated the first sawmill edger he made.

Inquiries regarding Potts' invention have come from such distant parts as the University of Maine, Old Mexico and South America. Four or five letters a week poured in last year, and Potts received 500 requests for machines from all over. A man from Montana was here Friday to see about purchasing a machine.

"Machinery Potts"
With the end of the war, the 70-year-old inventor is trying to make arrangements to have the parts made up at parts plants, so they will only need to be assembled at his shop under the copyrighted name of "Machinery Potts," which is located at 1633 East Main in an old red barn-like structure. Sawmills can then be turned out in quantities to supply the increasing demand.

Potts has pottered with machinery all his life and constructed over 100 mills as a contractor and builder. He has managed mills and worked in every phase of the industry.

In 1924 he went to Odell lake when it was covered with snow, with 40 head of horses, a sawmill and equipment for the whole outfit. He ran the mill there, cutting tunnel timbers for the Southern Pacific railroad, for the Natron cutoff from here to Eugene through 1925.

Visit in North—Mr. and Mrs. Joe Hicks, Pacific Terrace, have returned from a weekend stay in Gearhart and Portland where they have been on a combined business and pleasure trip.
