THERE appears now a definite possibility that the lumber operations organized by the CIO in the northwest may not go on strike. No one can say for certain, of course, what may come of current negotiations, but indications are that a settlement may prevent a CIO walkout which, coupled with the present AFL lumber strike, would paralyze the northwest lumber industry.

EPLEY

CIO negotiators, who have been meeting at Portland with industry representatives, are armed with a strike authorization by a large majority of the membership. Thus far, however, they have chosen not to exercise the authorization. Meetings were held last week with federal conciliators and operators' representatives, and further conferences are slated to begin next Thursday.

For a while it appeared that Klamath CIO lumber workers might hardly get back to work after the local CIO strike before they would be called off the job again on an industry-wide tie-up. Fortunately, it didn't happen that way, and CIO plants here have gotten back into the operating swing.

The CIO strike vote was taken to support a demand for a 25 cents-an-hour across-the-board increase. Apparently, some progress has been made in the discussions with operators and conciliators. It may be that a ground of understanding can be reached that will prevent a widespread CIO tie-up which would be most serious .

No Inter-Union Trouble Here

WE hear of nothing optimistic about the AFL lumber industry strike, which has closed down one major mill here, and has affected seriously such nearby places as Lakeview.

The AFL has been picketing some CIO mills, particularly in the metropolitan areas around Portland and the sound. In some cases, CIO men have gone through the picket lines. In others, the CIO has obtained injunctions to stop the picketing. In still others, particularly recently at Portland, the picketing has succeeded in closing down the operations.

There have been no local reports of efforts of local AFL men to picket the CIO mills. In fact, nothing of the kind has been reported within the jurisdiction of the Klamath basin district council. Hence, the operation of CIO mills and woods gangs here have not been affected since the CIO strike settlement, either through AFL or CIO action.

Complicated

THE whole lumber strike situation is very complicated, and difficult for anyone to understand. Probably, any well-informed man in either labor or industry could put his finger right now on the compromise which will eventually form the basis for settlement of the whole thing. That's usually the case, but there seems to be a lot of jockeying and struggle necessary before reaching the inevitable conclusion.

Klamath's industry, at any rate, has been fortunate in not having strikes in both unions at the same time .

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8—A minor ado has appeared fragmentarily in the papers about a report of the special committee for reorganizing national defense which was completed last April, and has been lost under the massive table of the joint chiefs of staff since that time. You may have seen an editorial now and then inquiring what became of it.

I found it. It was in the street gutter around the corner from my office when I went home last night, and while the night was dark, somehow my eye did not miss it. It seemed to be phosphorescent.

On my copy there was no restriction against looking at it, and censorship is over anyway. I hurried back to the office to study this document so mysterious that the heavy minds of the war department had been sitting upon it for seven months—seven long months mind you—with a secrecy beyond ordinary secrecy.

• • •

Reorganize Defense Setup

I FOUND out what had happened. This committee plan of defense which is to keep the peace of the world—if peace treaties can be made—had requested urgent action in reporting to the president their conclusions for a complete reorganization of the entire defense setup. I am told the report had the approval of the fighting generals and even fighting admirals–Eisenhower, MacArthur, Halsey, Nimitz.

Furthermore it says itself a great majority of field army officers and half the navy officers at the fighting fronts agreed on the basic recommendations. Indeed, the report itself is signed by one admiral and three army officers, with only one dissenting voice, the voice of a retired admiral.

This, then, is what the fighting leaders want, and what they want is a single defense department taking in the army, navy and air forces under single-headed control. It would be called the department of the armed forces.

• • •

Team Work Necessary

THE whole tone stressed the necessity for team work, closer cooperation, economy in supplies and efficiency by coherent group action and integration. It conceded duplication and some lack of mutual understanding as well as jealousies in past competition between the services.

It wanted a single cabinet officer. This would mean at least one of the existing navy and army cabinet men would have to go. Yet such a consideration hardly explained the filing of the report under a table in the war department because I know War Secretary Patterson is for it.

Of course it would also mean combining the war and navy committees in congress and some congressmen would lose a good job also. A little inquiry disclosed the most powerfully placed, but not necessarily most numerous opposition came from heads of the house and senate war and navy committees. (They control appropriations.) A little further checking indicated Admiral King, the navy director, also is against the idea. As near as I can find these combined forces were being awarded the chief inside credit, if you can call it that, for a skillful delaying action .

The report sets down what looks like a new streamlined organization with a good chance for efficency if the men who operate it can keep it more on its toes than they were at Pearl Harbor.

• • •

President Would Be Top Man

TOP man would be the president, commander-in-chief as now. Next in line would be the cabinet secretary of the armed forces, then the commander of the armed forces (a sort of chief of staff like General Marshall) and finally the commanders of army, navy and air on an equal footing to operate the divisions under them.

Thus the air force made up mostly of the younger general officers who know most thoroughly the revolutionary science of modern warfare would attain equal ranking with army and navy, at long last, in one single armed force. Their minds are less bound by tradition than the others and therefore they seem best fitted to take at least an equal footing with the others in maintaining our interests in the boundless new concepts of security.

Down below this top realignment, the navy and war departments would operate about as present with duplicating bureaus combined and some other minor changes.

Well who can find fault with this? What objection could there be? The minority report of the single retired admiral actually agrees the plan is better than any proposed. He himself recommends placing the war and navy departments under a single head but continuing the independent setups otherwise as they are. He does not say there would not be greater efficiency in a single department but he just is far from convinced there would be. He sees danger in one man having so much power at the top (a president runs the bigger job of the country without danger) and he suspects there will be practical difficulties of functioning at the bottom (which no doubt there will be at first as the combination will require months of paper work.) The objections therefore are light.

I wiped the dust from the copy I found (strangely it had cobwebs on it also) and wondered what I ought to do with it. I am a conscientious man. Should I return it to the war department, and ask permission to perhaps mention it to you? I decided to do half of that. I went to the war department with it, found the massive table of the combined chiefs of staff and I got out my match box, and I took the report, and I started a fire under the table. I hope they find it hot.

Fire Threatens Homes At Manzanita Beach

NEHALEM, Ore., Oct. 8 (AP)—A forest fire burning for several days on Neahkahnie mountain threatened several hundred beach homes near Neahkahnie and Manzanita beach yesterday.

A stiff ocean breeze spanked the smoldering fire into flame after it started in log slashings and reached highway 101. Forestry patrols stationed water trucks on the road to halt flames threatening to jump across.

The War Today

By DeWITT MacKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

Washington's decision to abolish Shinto as a state religion in Japan may prove to be the key to that misguided country's reformation, for much of the hold which the militarists had on the people was attributable to the fact that the government spoke through the mouth of sacred Shinto.

MacKENZIE

Lest there be some who fear this is a blow at freedom of worship, it should be said that it is not. The plan merely dissociates the religion from the very obvious evils of government control, but leaves the individual Japanese the right to worship as he chooses If he clings to the ancestor and hero worship, which is the basis of Shinto (the way of the Gods), then it is his prerogative to do so.

Shinto-State Setup "Natural"

The Shinto-state setup has been a "natural" for the industrial tycoons and militarists, who have worked hand in hand to conquer neighboring states and reduce them to vassalage. Government schemes, which ordinarily might have been objectionable to many of the Japanese public, became acceptable when passed down via the Shinto route.

The efficacy of this dual control was multiplied by the fact that the mikado was head of both state and religion. As a direct descendant of the sun-goddess Amaterasu he is regarded by a goodly portion of his subjects as a living God.

Because of this circumstance it strikes me as almost a foregone conclusion that Hirohito must abdicate as emperor when the separation of religion and state becomes effective. Obviously he can't hold both positions, and it looks as though fate has selected the one which he must abandon, for while a God may discard temporal rule it's hard to see how he can divest himself of a divinity which Japanese legend says runs back 2600 years and more.

Hirohito Abdication Talked

As a matter of fact, there has been considerable speculation among Japanese personages in Tokyo recently about the possibility of Hirohito abdicating the throne and devoting himself exclusively to spiritual leadership. However, something of an "if" enters in here, for there is more than a little demand in allied capitals that the mikado be tried as a war criminal. How such a trial would affect his status as a "Living God," and especially if he were convicted, is one of the imponderables. One can see that it wouldn't boost his stock any.

RESINOL OINTMENT AND SOAP

A Reputation for Superb Quality has been MAINTAINED

During the war period, shortages and war-time restrictions made it impossible for us to produce enough Sicks' Select Beer to take care of the ever-increasing demand for this famous and popular product.

However, in spite of the tremendous demand, throughout the war we maintained our exacting and unvarying brewing standards and the superb quality of Sicks' Select.

This policy was thoroughly approved by our Sicks' Select dealers. Despite the fact that it meant less immediate business for them they gave whole-hearted cooperation to our program to maintain, unblemished, the reputation of our product. In turn, we served our dealers upon a carefully worked-out and fair quota basis so that throughout the war each dealer knew just how much Sicks' Select he would receive each month.

Although peace has now returned, there is no assurance that Sicks' Select production can immediately meet the tremendous demand which appreciation of its unvarying quality has brought.

For the present, on behalf of our dealers and ourselves, we must once more prevail upon the patience and understanding of the public. If your dealer is temporarily out of stock, remember it will be regularly replenished . . . and the Sicks' Select he will have will be of the identical superb quality you have always known.
