WOMAN'S PROPERTY DAMAGED BY AUTOS

That third car was just the last straw. Mr. and Mrs. John O'Flaherty, 730 Jefferson, had a perfect right to complain to the city council Monday night when car No. 3 plowed over their lawn and hit the residence, damaging crockery, shelves and other household equipment. City Attorney Henry Perkins voiced the O'Flaherty's complaint and the matter was referred to the city engineer and street committee to investigate the possibility of building some sort of a barricade at that point. Jefferson street is steep from 7th and 8th and the cars have careened down the hill onto the O'Flaherty property.

The 17th Airborne division was first committed to combat in the Battle of the Bulge, and the method of its entry was one of the most spectacular of the war. The troopers of the 17th were in their English billets one day, and at Reims the next, face to face with Von Rundstedt's breakthrough divisions. The initial assignment of the men who wear the grasping eagle's claw on their shoulders was an enormously important one. They had been flown into the battle area in transports, under cover of darkness and in treacherous flying weather, to relieve the 11th Armored division south of Bastogne, and to attempt to checkmate the German counterattack.

The mission of the 17th was not to hold, but to attack. And attack they did, despite a fierce foe, road blocks, snowstorms and thousands of land mines. The men of the 17th knifed into Cettur, into Bouillet, Steinbach and Limerle, cutting vital highways. At the end of a month of savage battle, the 17th stormed into Germany near the town of Witt.

In March the 17th participated in one of the most brilliant airborne operations of the war—an action which helped set up the final drive toward Berlin. The men dropped across the Rhine in 3000 gliders, none of which was
