

U. S. HOLDS KEY TO ATOMIC ENERGY

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16 (AP)—Rear Admiral William R. Purnell said today America still holds a number of "trade secrets" of atomic energy and predicted no other country can make an atomic bomb "in quite a stretch of time."

Purnell testified before senate military-commerce subcommittees, holding hearings on a proposed national science foundation. He was described by Senator Magnuson (D-Wash.) as the navy's expert on atomic energy.

On the other side of the capital, the house military committee voted to reopen hearings Thursday on legislation setting up a commission to control domestic activities in the field of atomic energy.

Chairman May (D-Ky.) said

the hearings would last only one day and only four witnesses will be heard.

They will be provided, May said, by congressional and other groups who had objected to the committee's earlier decision closing hearings after one day of testimony last week. Among those who had objected were Philip Murray, head of the CIO, and Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D-Calif.).

"I don't know who the witnesses will be," May said.

Admiral Purnell told the senate committee that the theory behind the atomic bomb is not a secret, "but making the bomb is."

The advent of the atomic bomb and other weapons, he said, makes speculation rather hopeless.

"I don't think that the best scientists can say where we will be 15 years from now. They are going to find new stuff. We have got to adapt it as it develops."

"It may be the navy that carries it out or it may be that the navy will be wiped out. Or maybe the army or the army air force may be wiped out."

"Submarines, planes or rockets" may be the vehicle for atomic energy, he said.

Purnell said the fuse used in exploding atomic energy is a "trade secret" which has never been released even to an ally. He said only one company in the United States possessed it.

Purnell said he knew of no defense against the atomic bomb. He said that, so far as he knew, reports last week from the house naval committee of a possible defense were not based on navy testimony.

Rear Admiral W. H. P. Blandy, chief of the navy's bureau of ordnance, expressed doubt that any one counter-measure can be effective against atomic bombs.

"I doubt if more than two or three of them will be made the same," he testified.

Earlier, Navy Secretary Forrestal told the committees that the government should "not try to regiment too much" in carrying out a proposed program of stimulating scientific research.

Forrestal's word of caution came in reply to an inquiry by Senator Magnuson about the possibility of creating a scientific reserve of those persons receiving government aid in their research.

The secretary said these people should be available in an emergency but he added that too strict regimentation "might scare some of the lads off."

Forrestal said that he would prefer to see military research dealt with separately. But he accepted as proper a provision for a definite percentage of the total funds to be devoted to that field.
