Today's Roundup

SOMETIMES, Klamath Falls is classified as in "Southern Oregon" and sometimes in "Eastern Oregon." That's because it is in the southern part of the state, but east of the Cascades which make such a marked difference in climate and flora.

EPLEY

Peculiarly, Southern Oregon... will be one of the areas least affected by air travel, offering a special opportunity for rail business.

Two Sides, Always

SOME time ago the papers carried several stories about the indifferent attitude of people who came here ostensibly to work in the potatoes, and we commented here on the subject.

Since then, we have received an anonymous letter approaching the story from the side of the transient worker. Its lack of signature disqualifies it for publication, but to be fair we will summarize it briefly here.

Our impressions of the centralized transient workers camps are that they offer much more than this letter indicates. No doubt such conditions exist on some farms, and they are deplorable, while on others more adequate arrangements for workers have been established.

The general program in this area has been to provide quarters in the transient camps, and to pay wages that are certainly among the highest for agricultural work in the United States.

It is also a fact that one pretty well determines his own living standards. Having done a tour of duty as a harvest hand, we have made some personal observations on that point.

News Behind The News

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18 - General MacArthur's address of final victory sounded to the uninitiated public as if he were merely talking abstract strategy—a necessary new strategy of complete integration of army, navy and air force.

INDIAN TRIBES TO HOLD POW-WOW

BROWNING, Mont., Oct. 18 (AP)—American Indians want "a bill of rights." The National Council of American Indians plans to inaugurate "a campaign to remove all racial discrimination," when it convenes for its second annual convention at this northwestern Montana Blackfeet reservation agency October 22-25.

bomb, a directed missile, which hit Washington in what might be called a strategic invisible spot. The joint chiefs of staff held an unreported secret meeting a week earlier (October 9) and failed to do anything about creating just such a combination of our forces into a single department.

Rhetorical Rocket

THERE were smiles among the knowing at MacArthur's courage in coming straight out for his beliefs to the top men of army and navy, for they knew very well what he was talking about if the public did not. The rhetorical rocket therefore did not miss its mark.

The common story going around the capitol is that the navy is responsible for the dangerous delay. (The delay is dangerous because it will require many months to get the new integrated system in operation, and, therefore, efficient national defense is being postponed.)

Retired Admiral Dissented

BUT you may recall my recent column exposing the report that indicated Admirals Nimitz and Halsey favored the combination as well as MacArthur, who has now spoken out, and Eisenhower, slated shortly to be chief-of-staff in General Marshall's place. Indeed, a navy admiral signed the report. Only a retired admiral dissented.

Thus, as deeply as I have been able to penetrate the secrecy about this whole business, it is accurate only to say Admiral King, whose resignation recently was predicted in the news accounts without denial, and a retired admiral are against it for the navy.

Unquestionably, a number of navy men do believe their appropriations from congress will be cut when they lose their independent status and must work on congress through a single department head. I guess this is apt to prove true.

But for any branch of the service to put appropriations above national defense, a plan of national defense considered necessary by a clear majority of the fighting leaders, would make them subject to courtmartial if I was running their service.

Sound Objections Mentioned

SOME sound objections have been mentioned against the single department plan as presented by the committee of army and navy leaders who went around the world and spent months at their task of preparing details of the new arrangement. But these are technical objections, as to whether this small bureau of the army should best be combined with that bureau, where to leave this subdivision of one service or that one.

Indeed, I personally believe the plan is faulty in at least one detail, which places entirely too much work upon the proposed first assistant secretary of the combined armed services. I do not think one man could handle all the work assigned.

But to defeat the integration program for such reasons is to stumble over blades of grass and butt your head into trees. The details can be worked out.

My little bonfire under the joint chiefs of staff did not even wake them up. I wonder if the MacArthur missile will.

Contract Awarded For Paving Project

SALEM, Oct. 18 (AP)—Contract for $22,000 worth of paving at the state fairgrounds was awarded yesterday to Warren Northwest, Inc., by Leo Spitzbart, state fair manager.

Other contracts will be awarded later, the federal government having paid the state $38,000 to repair damage done by the army. The fairgrounds were headquarters for troops guarding the Oregon coast against enemy attack.

Hunters Cause $1000 Damage To Livestock

MEDFORD, Oct. 18 (AP)—Farmer Verne Brophy said today hunters have caused nearly $1,000 damage to livestock. One steer was killed, another's leg broken and a herd of cattle ready for shipment to market was chased, causing them to lose weight, he said.

The World Today

By J. M. ROBERTS JR. AP Foreign Affairs Analyst

As it becomes increasingly evident that the "secret" of the atomic bomb lies principally in the ability to construct plants for its production, talk of what to do about it turns more and more on some method to prevent man from poisoning himself with the fruit of his own labors.

The Dublin, N. H., pronouncement by MacKENZIE a group interested in world peace, that a federation of the world is the only answer, is a natural reaction. It is as though they said that man, driven by this new fear, must now decide to do at once what he has known for ages that he must do in the end.

Dublin Meeting: The Dublin meeting presented an example itself, in a way, when Justice Owen Roberts and some of its other leaders felt unable to agree with the majority in its willingness to scrap the United Nations organization. The minority preferred to take the next step by step, with an initial union of the United States with other nations which already have adopted liberty for individuals.

That apparently would mean, so far as major powers are concerned, Britain and the United States, and would be mere formalization of a union which already exists in practice.

The inevitable result of such a step now would be a return to prewar attitudes by Russia, who felt herself forced into a pact with Germany when she decided, rightly or wrongly, that France and England were encouraging Hitler to move east instead of west. Russia's ideological war with capitalism is still a very real internal issue, regardless of how fuzzy the lines between her own system and capitalism have become. She has long felt herself surrounded, and her almost certain reaction to any greater formalization of the present Anglo-American alignment would be to back up, drop cooperation, perhaps hoping for the best but preparing herself for any possible unfriendly manifestation.

Nations Could Not Agree: If the nations could not agree at San Francisco to give all nations an equal position before an international control body, there is no indication that anything can be done along that line immediately under the fear of atomic energy. The Dublin proposal was for a world government ruled by the general assembly of nations, instead of by a few great powers as under the UNO charter, certainly strikes at San Francisco's greatest disappointment.

If the atomic bomb were a secret which could be kept there would be the possibility of an Anglo-American "peace ultimatum" under which punishment for starting a war, or for one nation establishing hegemony over another through military might, would be swift and certain. But with the situation as it actually exists, the UNO charter, with its hopes for revision, plus some specific agreements on atomic power, seem about the best practical hope.

The Society of Automotive Engineers is concentrating on development of special driving devices for disabled veterans, particularly for those who have lost arms or legs.
