Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

RETURN of civilian fliers to the municipal airport at an early date seems definitely in order.

The field is still the home of the Klamath naval air station, but navy activity there has been drastically reduced, and the outstanding facilities are virtually unused except for transient service planes.

EPLEY

It is not supposed the navy will insist on maintaining restrictions against civilian flying on a field which it is not using. Even should there be an increase in navy activity, the field is certainly ample to accommodate both civilian and service aviation.

The navy has always been agreeable to use of the field by scheduled commercial planes, and it could reasonably expand its policy now to permit all types of civilian aviation. Local civilian fliers have been basing their operations chiefly on the civil air patrol airport at Worden, a temporary set-up.

• • • •

CAP Plans

AMONG other evidences of renewed civilian aviation activity, the local unit of the civil air patrol is soon to launch a cadet training program.

An army P-17 plane is to be brought here for use in this activity, and the long, wide paved runways of the municipal airport will be needed by the student fliers.

By next spring, it appears that this and other civilian flying activity in the Klamath region will be in full swing. We hope, by that time, that mainline and feeder line commercial service here will have been established.

• • • •

Air Station Facilities

WHILE Klamath people have hoped all along that the navy would see fit to continue its program here, sharing the field with civilian aviation, the official and semi-official local attitude has been to urge this only if it is properly a part of a military defense set-up and is economically feasible from a government standpoint. Klamath has not tried to keep the navy here through political pressure.

Thus far, the navy policy for postwar activity has not included continuance of the Klamath station, and it is now virtually reduced to caretaker status. There are many facilities there, in addition to the definitely permanent improvements, that should remain on the field for other uses, or at least until it is known whether they might be needed in a future program.

Fortunately, the regulations now require that such facilities must be turned over to the surplus property agency for disposal. Oregon's congressional delegation has been informed of this situation, and it is possible some remedial legislation may be adopted. It does not make good sense to remove facilities from the Klamath field until its postwar plan can be worked out.

Of course, there are many facilities at the field that are of a permanent nature. The big paved runways and the huge apron, for instance, represent improvements which could not possibly have been financed locally for many years to come. They help to make the Klamath field one of the finest aviation set-ups in the west.

• • • •

There has been no substantiation of the rumor that started at Tulelake yesterday that a block of government land down there was going to be turned over to the Japanese for operation or settlement. Regardless of whether there is anything to it, it is just as well to point out that any such plan would be a mistake and of course, it would stir up terrific opposition in this area.

World Today

By DeWITT MacKENZIE

Associated Press Foreign Affairs Analyst

THE London press reported yesterday that it was likely there would be another meeting of the Big Three chiefs of state after the conference in Washington this weekend of President Truman, British Premier Attlee and Canadian Prime Minister MacKenzie King.

There not only is no confirmation of this report, but a spokesman for Mr. Attlee in London said that "as far as we know there is nothing in that report at all." Still, even if the story has no foundation I thing it's of great importance. It's important because it registers a general public desire—a belief that a meeting of the Big Three would ease the numerous crises which are be-deviling Europe and Asia.

Mr. Attlee himself, speaking just before setting out for America, made a declaration which is the key to public sentiment in this matter. He said it was his view that people must look to the United Nations and their close unity of purpose, "especially that between Britain, the United States and Russia," as a foundation of peace.

Powers Personified

THAT'S what the public believes, too, and to the man-in-the-street these three paramount powers are personified by Messrs Truman, Stalin and Attlee. The little man-in-the-street believes this trio of great executives possesses the magic to pull the world out of its tail spin. He believes in the old adage that too many cooks spoil the broth. He thinks that the three heads of state by themselves can achieve what couldn't be accomplished by a dozen assistants who have to keep referring questions back to headquarters, and can't bargain on their own responsibility.

The biggest allied decisions of the war were made in conferences of the Big Three. Sometimes bargains were involved. This was done by the chiefs of state—with the advice, of course, of their military experts.

It might be that the Anglo-American allies were about to undertake a big offensive. Stalin might say in effect: "Russia will guarantee to keep 50 divisions of Germans occupied on such-and-such a Soviet front for a month from the time you launch your drive." That sealed the pact.

curves which are clear or packed.

Two speeding motorists crashed into snowplows on Sun mountain, highway officials said. There were no personal injuries and little damage to equipment. One incident occurred Wednesday, the other Friday. In both cases cars were traveling at too high a rate of speed and skidded into the plows.

A Medford-bound Greyhound bus went off the road and into a ditch near the Lee Holliday dairy about five miles from town on the Keno road early this morning.

No one was injured. A wrecker called from Balsiger's garage towed the bus onto the pavement and it went on to Medford.

WE'RE in a tight spot in this north China area. We have TROOPS there—marines. Our navy department says they are there SOLELY to help the Chungking Chinese government obtain the surrender of Jap forces and carry out the Jap surrender terms according to international agreement.

What Ailed Her Boy?

"What have you been doing to my boy? He now minds me when I speak and even looks ahead and does what I want before I ask him. What you been doing to him?" So asked one of our Oregon Chinese mothers. The Bible man told her how Chin had taken Christ into his life and—"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation."—Bible. Then came chapter two. Seeing the change in her boy, this mother also received Christ into her life. Meet her and you meet a woman on fire for Christ.

See them come—a people of God being gathered out of every nation. They were dead in trespasses and sins. They ran with the world seeking soul-rest and finding it not. As set against God, they were deserving of wrath—Eph 2. Bible. Now they are a people of God—"O Happy Day that fixed my choice on Thee, my Saviour and my God." Right now, feelings or no feelings, face about, receive Christ and live by Power from on High.
