Today's Roundup

CHEERFUL thought today is that there shouldn't be any official restrictions this year on Christmas decorations...

EPLEY

For several years, there has been a shadow over Christmas. That shadow has now been lifted. Not all of those who helped lift it will be with us...

Those Special Events

Why can't we buy bonds and urge others to buy them just for the sake of the investment and the aid they will be to controlling inflation?

That puts into words a question which no doubt has entered many a mind. War bond and Victory Loan campaigns have been a parade of special events and publicity stunts.

But wait a minute. Before we denounce our fellow citizens for seeming to require such antics to get them to buy government securities, let us reflect that all of these things are distinctively American...

Maybe it isn't right. Maybe we ought to change the country. But that's what it is now, and somehow it oversubscribed seven war loans and won a tough war.

News Behind The News

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14—The stage Mr. Truman set for the management-labor conference looked better from the back of the wings than the way you saw it out front.

limited to one vote and no representation on committees. But when the curtain went up, there was Mr. Lewis, practically in center stage, less talkative than usual and without a spotlight on him, yet visibly the unannounced star.

Lewis Called

A FEW days before Mr. Truman had called Lewis into the White House. It was not only the first time Lewis had seen the inside of that august edifice for years; it had been years since he had even seen Truman.

This was a bonanza for Truman, in the theatrical terminology of the day. The conference was being publicly foredoomed. The dominant power was Hillman and his CIO. It was he who took the initiative in handing Lewis the spear role.

The chances for final, convincing peace are hazardous, of course, but this is the way the stage was happily reset to improve them at the last minute.

My information is that the agreed goals were two: A—Adopt a set of new, strong principles under which labor and management can live. B—To set up new machinery for collective bargaining.

Principles Not Difficult

THE principles should not prove excessively difficult. The machinery is the important thing. The national labor relation and war labor boards have been farces which no one wants to play longer.

The idea of new labor boards, more honest, more judicial (creating a refuge where both sides can go to get justice instead of political or high-pressure settlements) is one solution which seems obvious to me.

This cannot be done, however, for every union in the country, say those who are intimate experts with an objective inner view of the problem.

My own belief is that if you lay down a genuine set of principles—sufficiently genuine to get both sides honestly in favor of making them work—the government will have far fewer cases than you might guess from the existing conditions.

Success or failure of the conference rests upon the degree of which this one single principle is achieved.

again, you are a real citizen, as you are the only one I ever heard say anything nice about our boys in blue.

"We all know the soldiers, sailors and marines all had their job to do in this dreadful war and each and everyone did it the best they could. And all of us want to say 'thank you boys, one and all, soldiers, sailors, marines, merchant seamen, coast-guard."

We take our hats off to one and all. There will be an empty space now when NAS closes its gates, and the bell-bottoms are nowhere around. The little boys from Tulelake did one grand job too, but nothing has ever been said, but no amount of words

The World Today

By DeWITT MacKENZIE AP Foreign Affairs Analyst

Yesterday was a real Anglo-American day, what with Prime Minister Attlee's address to congress and the agreement between Washington and London to join hands in a committee of inquiry to deal with the problem of the Jewish national home in Palestine.

MacKENZIE

Of course this doesn't necessarily presage agreement either in the matter of Palestine, or concerning the affairs in which Mr. Attlee is mainly interested at the moment—the atomic bomb and that big loan to Great Britain.

Attlee's job, I take it, was largely one of salesmanship. He wanted to convince America that there's no threat to our interests in England's new socialist government with its nationalization program, and that a loan is justifiable.

"I look forward to an era of increasing cooperation and friendship between the USA and Great Britain—not as an exclusive friendship but as a contribution to the knitting together with all peoples through the United Nations organization in the bonds of peace."

"In our internal policies each will follow the course decided by the peoples' will. You will see us (Britain) embarking on projects of nationalization. We shall be working out a planned economy. You, it may be, will continue in your more individualistic methods. It is more important that we should understand each other and other nations whose institutions differ from our own."

ALBANY, Nov. 14 (AP)—A farm planning conference will be held here January 29, with agricultural experts and Linn county farmers attending.

after peace can support. It means that America and any other nations which wish to pursue a policy of individual enterprise can do so and still be able to cooperate with countries which prefer nationalization and perhaps regimentation of the individual. A nation doesn't have to accept or even endorse the politicalism of another country in order to be friendly.

MAN CONFESSES TO ROBBERY-SLAYING

SEATTLE, Nov. 14 (AP)—A 25-year-old man and his wife were held on an open charge today after Detective Captain Richard Mahoney said the man confessed to the slaying three weeks ago of Sam Katz, 76-year-old clothing merchant.

Two other men whom the couple named as participants in the robbery-slaying were also under arrest, Mahoney said. The detective said that the man confessed he hit Katz twice with an axe, and one of the other men stabbed the victim "several times" in the throat. In a confession which police said was taken down in shorthand, the man's wife, said she went to the store where Katz lived in a back room, and after a period of conversation with Katz, admitted the other three for the pre-planned robbery. Katz never locked the doors of his establishment. His body was found the morning of October 26.
