

More Service People Will Celebrate First Postwar Christmas In Old USA

By JOY BIGGS
More service people will be opening packages under the family Christmas tree this year, light overseas mailing from the Klamath Falls post office indicates.

Although there is no deadline date for mailing to personnel of the U. S. navy and marine corps, most of the packages assigned to them were sent by the army-mailing deadline, October 15, R. L. Griffith, Klamath Falls assistant postmaster, said today.

Relatives of many servicemen and women in the Pacific theater of operations are delaying mailing in the hopes that they may be home for Christmas, and these hopes are justified in many instances, with telegrams arriving every few days to that effect.

Mailing to the Hawaiian Islands can be delayed until two weeks before Christmas. Many are waiting until the last minute, with the hope that gifts may be presented in person.

Hope Runs High
High stacks of Pelican Bay boxes in the Klamath County chamber of commerce, Klamath Falls hotels and banks, and prominent buildings in other towns in the county, indicate that hope runs high that hundreds of men will be home for the Christmas season. These boxes are a gift from the Pelican Bay Lumber company, for mailing articles to service personnel, and have been in demand for the past three Christmases. Some of the boxes made as many as 10 trips recrossing the oceans during the war.

Domestic holiday mailing is not expected to pick up until the first week in December, Griffith stated. It usually reaches its heaviest between the 5th and the 25th. Postal authorities again urge persons to mail early to avoid congestion, and to insure safe receipt of packages by Christmas.

Unclaimed Packages
The tremendous amount of unclaimed packages and letters received in the Klamath Falls post office every week is absolutely unnecessary, the assistant postmaster said. If persons will keep their minds on what they are doing when they are addressing post cards, letters and packages, and follow a few extremely simple rules, every item mailed will reach its destination, he said.

Typewritten addresses are naturally the easiest to read, but if longhand is kept free of flourishes and fancy twists, it should be legible. If the mail is to be delivered in a large city, the zone number should be written clearly after the name of the town. Address of the sender should be written in the upper left-hand corner.

Six Per Week
Around six packages per week are received at the Klamath Falls post office with no indication of who is to receive them, or who sent them, Griffith said. Even if the wrapping should be mutilated so that the address cannot be recognized, it may still reach its destination if a slip with the correct information is enclosed in the package.

Packages which cannot be delivered are opened in the post office that receives them. If they contain the identifying slip, they are re-addressed and delivered. If there is no identification, they are held for two weeks and then sent to the unclaimed mail department in Seattle, Wash., where they are eventually auctioned off to the highest bidder.

Between 25 and 30 letters are received here per week with no way of telling where they came from or where they should go. Many of these are mis-addressed and some are entirely blank, just stamped and dropped in a mail pick-up box. Post cards especially suffer from this over-secrecy, Griffith said; two or three such blanks are received at this post office each week.

Letters that cannot be delivered are sent the following Thursday after they are received, to the Portland dead-letter office, where they are opened. If they contain valuable enclosure of any description, and there is any way to identify the intended receiver or sender through the contents, the letter is re-enveloped in a dead-letter envelope and mailed, with a five-cent fee collectable on delivery. Letters containing no enclosure of value are destroyed at the Portland office.

BURNS ELKS LODGE TO BE INSTITUTED

December 15 at 8 p. m. is the time set for institution of the new Elks lodge at Burns, according to plans completed at a conference held at the Elks lodge at Lakeview last night.

Malcolm Epley, district deputy grand exalted ruler for Oregon south, called the Lakeview meeting, which occurred on the occasion of his official visit to that lodge. Epley conferred with representatives of the Burns group and of Bend lodge, which is sponsor of the new organization.

Grand Exalted Ruler Frank

Lomergan of Portland will institute the Burns lodge, Epley said. Groups from lodges throughout Oregon are expected to attend. The Burns lodge will be added to the Oregon south district.
