

58 Marooned Elk Hunters Rescued; Incredible Story Of Hardship Told

POMEROY, Wash., Nov. 20 (AP)—An incredible story of hardship and stubborn ingenuity was told today as 58 elk hunters, marooned for ten days in the snowbound wilderness of the Blue mountains, arrived here safely after being rescued by a party using three rotary snowplows from the Walla Walla Army Air Base.

Casualties from the experience totalled one woman who suffered a heart attack, a man who contracted pneumonia, one man with a broken leg, one man with a ruptured kidney, and five pack mules which fell over a cliff and were killed.

Mrs. Minnie Boganne of Anacost, Wash., had a heart attack, and was left at the Clearwater ranger station. She will be brought out to Pomeroy later today. Names of the injured men were not immediately available.

Raging Blizzard
When a raging blizzard closed in on the mountain top where several groups of the hunters were camping, the groups banded together and formed a pool of their supplies.

Lester Riley, Snake river cattle ranch owner, started out on horseback for Pomeroy to bring help. Fighting his way through snowdrifts sometimes forty feet deep, he finally reached Pomeroy with his mount almost dead from exhaustion. There he arranged to hire for $800 a bulldozer to attempt to clear the roadway back to where the rest of the hunters waited.

It took three days for the machine to buck a path through the huge drifts back to the mountain top where 25 of the hunters' cars were snow-buried. All day Saturday the people worked with shovels, digging out the cars, while food was running dangerously low and had to be rationed. They finally assembled the cars in a caravan and on Sunday morning started back towards Pomeroy with the bulldozer clearing a path ahead.

Slept in Snow
By Sunday night the party had made three miles. They slept that night in the snow, and huddled in the cars for warmth. Meanwhile, Governor Wallgren and Virgil Bennington, state game commissioner, had arranged with the Walla Walla Air Base for three rotary snowplows which had started from Pomeroy, attempting to clear the road to reach the party.

Late Monday, the caravan had travelled three more miles and met the snowplows and the army rescue party. During the last few miles of travel on Monday, screaming gales of 70 miles an hour velocity blew swirls of freezing snow so thick the party could see only a few feet ahead. Frequently they had to leave the cars to get out and dig with shovels as the bulldozer labored up ahead.

Mules Killed
A string of pack mules carrying precious provisions got off the road, and five of them plunged over a cliff and were killed. Two more mules were lost and when found later, one of them was flat on its back weighted down by the heavy pack, kicking its legs out of a deep snowdrift. Both were saved.

Members of the party praised Lester Riley for risking his life on the trip for help, and likewise praised a negro muleskinner, Otis Banks, who several times rescued people who had become bogged down in deep snow.

J. C. Coleman, of Kelso, Wash., said "I wouldn't take a million dollars for this experience, but I wouldn't give two cents to do it again."
"It was the most terrible thing I've ever been through," he added.

Specialist To Conduct Class

Instruction in making inexpensive dress forms, will be conducted this Tuesday in the Fairview school auditorium, by Lucy Lane of Corvallis, extension specialist in clothing and textiles.

This class is a result of numerous requests on how to fit clothes made at home. The class will start at 10:30 sharp Tuesday morning, and is open to all women in the county who are interested in making their own clothes. Bring sack lunches and stay to see two dress forms completed, invites Mrs. Winnifred K. Gillen, Klamath county home demonstration agent.

The forms are made of gummed paper on a cotton shirt base, fitted on the individual. Mrs. Gillen suggests that women planning to make their own dress forms bring friends or neighbors to help fit the forms to their figure. Shirts and paper used to make these forms may be obtained in packaged sets from some department stores.

Jap Camp Property To Be Disposed Of

TULELAKE — Dale Archer, San Francisco, has been assigned to the Tulelake Japanese segregation center by the reconstruction finance corporation to speed up the disposal of property which has been in use at the project since the camp was opened in 1942. Property will be listed for disposal as soon as it is declared surplus in anticipation of the closing date, February 1, 1946.

The administration has announced that other representatives of RFC will probably join Archer in the near future. While no announcement has been made as to distribution of material, it is understood that the motor pools, both in the WRA area and the military section, will be left intact to serve local government agencies.

The army had more than 900 post exchange outlets in the Pacific.

Klamath Men Enlist In Army

Voluntary military enlistments which suffered a lull since March of this year, are picking up this month, army and navy recruiting officers announced today.

Sgt. Elmer Thurling of the Klamath Falls army recruiting office purchased tickets on tonight's Portland train for seven men enlisted.

Two 17-year-olds, John Timothy Meads and James Harvey Phipps will be on Tuesday's train with Thomas Paul Cruz and William E. Murray, both 18, and Glenn Davis, 19.

These boys, who are entering the service for the first time, have all chosen three-year enlistments, and with the exception of Phipps who has requested European duty, have indicated a preliminary choice of assignments in the United States.

Re-enlists
Daniel R. Mocabee, just discharged from the army, is re-enlisting as a corporal in the enlisted reserve corps. This enlistment includes two weeks at a training camp each year, out of civilian life.

Navy Recruiting Officer Al C. Friesen reports six men enlisted in the regular navy during the past week. They are Samuel F. Penlesky, Wesley L. Stewart, Leland J. Sturm, Roger E. Eckert and Joseph L. Keller Jr. of Klamath Falls, and Marvin H. Maerz of Sprague River.

Enlistments in the navy may now be for two, three, four or six-year terms, Friesen advised.
