Problems Of Oregon Farmers Discussed

CORVALLIS, Dec. 13 (AP)—Postwar problems of Oregon farmers, who depend on out-of-state markets for every major crop except hogs and sweet clover seed, are being mulled at the annual conference of agricultural and home economics workers at Oregon State college.

E. L. Potter, chief of the college division of agricultural economics, told the group domestic and foreign surpluses might tend to depress prices below production costs.

"Oregon farmers are particularly affected by such surpluses" he said, "because the state depends on out-of-state markets."

The annual conference opened Tuesday and will end tomorrow.
