

Lengthy Pearl Quiz May Extend To February 15

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20 (AP) — The senate agreed today to extend the joint congressional investigation of Pearl Harbor until February 15. Similar action now is up to the house.

Senate Majority Leader Barkley (D-Ky.), who also is chairman of the investigating group, obtained senate agreement to the extension beyond the original date of January 3.

Barkley said he believed that at least all of the evidence could be taken by February 15. It might be necessary, he said, to seek another extension of time in which to write a report on the investigation.

The senate voted the extension while the investigating committee session elsewhere was hearing that a British-American naval agreement — signed by Pacific naval commanders December 6, 1941, envisioned a U. S. attack on Truk if the Japanese went to war.

The agreement, signed by Admiral Thomas C. Hart, commander of the U. S. Asiatic fleet, and Admiral Tom S. V. Phillips of the British Far Eastern fleet, went into the records of the committee.

It was read by William D. Mitchell, committee counsel, after Admiral R. K. Turner had testified the U. S. high command refused to approve previous proposed allied war plans in the Pacific because the British fixed a "deadline" the Japanese shouldn't cross.

This deadline was a fixed spot the British felt was a first line of defense and any move by Japan to go beyond it would mean aggression to them.

The inquiry also brought out today a sharp disagreement among top navy officers over whose job it was in 1941 to inform fleet commanders of international developments before the Japanese struck Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941.

Joint Plan
Turner told the committee that the joint operations plan signed by Hart and Phillips arrived at the navy department here at 11 p. m., December 6, and was not decoded until eight or nine hours later. He said the approval of Admiral Harold R. Stark, then chief of naval operations, went back to Hart a few hours after the Japanese attack at Pearl Harbor.
