Today's Roundup

VIRTUALLY every settlement of a labor dispute is a compromise. The two sides hold out for certain concessions, and finally, when the chips are down, both find it advisable to give a little...

EPLEY

That was what happened in the settlement of the AFL lumber strike in the Klamath basin district. The original minimum wage was 87 1/2 cents. The union asked for $1.10. Operators came through with a proposal for $1. The union then made a compromise proposal of $1.02 1/2...

Stability The Goal

THE northwest council of the AFL, strategy board for the regional strike, has indicated it is annoyed at the settlement here. It claims the terms of the settlement preclude the unionists from raising the wage issue again in 1946. We do not find that specifically stated in the text of the agreement...

Unquestionably, if conditions became such that the agreed-upon wage structure was obviously and seriously out of line, it would be possible to open wage discussions. But it will benefit all concerned if the industry can go through the coming year without further difficulties...

Constant wrangling over one raised issue after another keeps the industry stirred up, threatens both company and personal financial status, and is no fun for anybody except those who would rather fight than work.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2—Mr. Byrnes avows the Christmas season peace he made at Moscow is an excellent compromise of difficult divergent views—a 50-50 settlement. He is prejudiced. He made the agreement. To an objective analyst, the agreement resembles the rabbit stew prepared by Old Trader Joe out in the Dakotas and sold to the Indians. One day an Indian complained about the rabbit stew. He said: "It tastes like horsemeat."

"Oh no," said Trader Joe in an injured tone. "It has good rabbit in it." "But does it have any horsemeat?" asked the Indian. "Only 50-50," conceded Joe. "Whattayamean fifty-fifty?" shouted the Indian. "This is horsemeat." "Well, if you want to know," confessed Joe, "I always use in each preparation—one rabbit and one horse."

For Japan, a nation we conquered and occupied alone, there is to be established a governing commission of the so-called United Nations, each with a veto power. We are to surrender our control to other nations, including Russia. But for the nations Russia conquered and occupied alone, there are to be no governing commissions. We do not have a veto power in any. Nor does any other nation.

There it will insist upon some additional leaders who "are really suitable" (?) and who will "work loyally" (l). As soon as Stalin finds men who are really suitable and who will work loyally, then the United States and Great Britain will recognize that government—but Mr. Byrnes says Stalin is already satisfied.

These are the hares of Mr. Byrnes' stew, the "concessions" he won for our way of life. Even the remaining horsemeat is doubtful and vague. Korea we split with Russia 50-50. China, we will withdraw from, leaving Chiang to survive communist revolution if he can.

Mr. Mack and I traveled from London by train to the Port of Newhaven on the southeast coast of England. The train ran in two sections, one jammed with civilians and military and the other with maybe 700 Yankee officers and GIs—a typical assortment for a Newhaven-Dieppe sailing.

These trains, which we filled like sardines after being jammed at barriers for nearly an hour, finally arrived at the port where they cast us out like the whale regurgitating Jonah. There we were packed aboard a battered little ship of such antiquity that it might well have been a life-boat on Noah's Ark.

Even passages were crowded with men and women sleeping in chairs and on the floor. On the whole it was a remarkably cheerful crowd, although everyone knew that the waters between England and France were dangerous with floating German mines which had been torn loose from their moorings by a fierce storm of several days' duration.

Wangled Cabin Mrs. Mack and I wangled a two-berth cabin and I, being an old campaigner, fell asleep, as

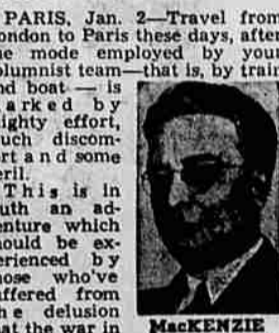

The hair of one hare. The tail of another. One horse (with a secret ingredient of bear, Russian bear). Absolutely no caviar or champagne.

"If you've got a hangover, dear, why don't you go out and run around the block like you used to do in the army?"

PARIS, Jan. 2—Travel from London to Paris these days, after the mode employed by your columnist team—that is, by train and boat—is marked by mightly effort, much discomfort and some peril. This is in truth an adventure which should be experienced by those who've suffered from the delusion that the war in Europe ended with V-E Day.

Two Filipinos Die In Brawl

SALEM, Jan. 2 (AP)—State police today still were trying to piece together the details of the New Year's eve brawl at Lake Labish which ended in the slaying of two Filipinos and the jailing of a Filipino who confessed killing them.

State police said Bernardo Jacutan, 49, said the quarrel started when others objected that Jacutan was winning all the money. The confession related that Jacutan shot and killed Lucas Galvez with a .22 rifle, and fatally stabbed Marcelino Ducusin with a kitchen knife.
