

Allies Spike Jap Plan To Recapture Nippon's Lost Fishing Business

TOKYO, Feb. 18 (AP)—Allied headquarters announced today it had spiked an audacious scheme by Japanese interests to recapture Nippon's lost pre-war fishing business under the American flag and with American ships.

American fishing areas in American vessels manned by Japanese crews. Headquarters said the firm had planned to can crab meat aboard and send it into the United States—duty free.

"Because it would have come from American ships, it would be a product of American fisheries and enter the American market without duty," explained Lt. Col. R. H. Fiedler, fisheries expert of headquarters' natural resources section.

Audacious Manner
"This significance of this scheme is not the mere fact that it was another attempt to break out of fishing areas now open to Japan, but an audacious manner in which the Japanese firm presumes to use the United States and the American flag to accomplish its ends."

Fiedler branded the request as "brazen," and one calculated to "evade restrictions placed upon the Japanese fishing industry."

Fiedler said the pre-war Japanese-American firm of Tokyo had asked permission "to charter, lease or otherwise obtain a few ships, cans, nets and all other equipment necessary for crab cannery ships" and had planned to convert them at Hakodate, on Hokkaido island.

It was proposed that the United States provide 10 cargo boats of from 3000 to 4000 tons each. The Japanese firm offered to provide 3500 veteran Japanese crab fishermen. It was estimated that by the end of September, 200,000 cases of crab meat valued at 100,000,000 yen ($6,666,666) would be produced, all of which the firm proposed to ship to America.

The firm proposed also to resume canning salmon under a similar plan.

The plan suggested that some of the products might be used for reparations. Representation of the program opened with elaborate introductions, designed to show the sincerity with which the Japanese are seeking to solve the postwar problems.

Fiedler charged, however, that the Japanese fishery and government officials were conducting a systematic campaign to break out of their fishing areas and said four out of six of their requests were denied.

The Red Rooster, a new restaurant at 814 Klamath, will open for business Tuesday of this week. The building, formerly occupied by the Bohemian cafe, has been completely renovated inside and all new equipment has been added, according to Harry Engman who will manage the new cafe. A private dining room for parties is also included in the set-up.

The cafe will hold open house Monday evening from 8 to 9 p. m. and will be open for regular business tomorrow.
