By MALCOLM EPLEY PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S squabble with Harold Ickes could not have been less favorably timed for the president.

This open dispute, in which the president has not come off too well so far, came at a moment when administration policy was under a major test in connection with the nation's postwar production failure, and many people who had been giving Mr. Truman the benefit of all doubts were beginning to question whether he was a big enough man for the job into which fate had placed him.

EPLEY

At this critical period in his presidential career, Mr. Truman found himself in a battle with one of the shrewdest, sharpest-tongued fighters in public life. The battle-wise interior secretary soon had the president on the defensive, trying to match wits with the granddaddy of all political controversialists of our generation.

This unfavorable development, the fight over the Pauley nomination that is bound to ensue in the senate, and the production mess, are most awkward for the president at a time when the public is beginning to look upon his administration in the light of prospects for the 1948 elections.

It will take masterful strategy for Mr. Truman to bring himself favorably out of this combination of political difficulties. And the public, a little tired of keeping its eyes overseas, is giving its full attention to the domestic scene, highlighted at the moment by the president's discomfiture.

The Crowd Takes Mr. Bishop

WE were in the stands at Oregon State college gym Saturday night when the Washington State college Cougars took a bad beating from the Beavers, and Washington State's great Gale Bishop took an even worse psychological beating from Beaver fans.

Let us explain first that the lower tiers of stands at the OSC gym are so close to the playing floor that the occupants of the stands can carry on intimate conversations with players and officials—something to which we are not accustomed. Thus the fans virtually participate in the game—and that's what they did to poor Mr. Bishop's discomfiture Saturday night.

Built up tremendously with publicity, and fresh from two great scoring sprees at Eugene earlier in the week, Bishop was the center of all attention when he came on the floor. He apparently was aware of that, and displayed at first what was probably a slight self-consciousness that could be mistaken for egotistical strutting.

On the previous night, it seems, he had done a little pouting over a foul call or something, and the fans were ready for him. They began pouring it on as the game advanced. There was nothing rough about this talk—it was on a collegiate level, but for that reason all the more biting in its sarcasm, and under the peculiar conditions in the OSC gym, Bishop must have heard most of it.

While the Oregon State team put up a great game—they had a terrific defense that night—the emotional pressure on Mr. Bishop from the crowd continued to grow. The Cougar star made an angry gesture at a Beaver after a mix-up. He argued an official's ruling. Those things got him deeper into psychological difficulties, and finally one of the officials, possibly reacting to the general trend of the affair, bawled him out in a loud voice heard in the far corners.

So Mr. Bishop had a bad evening, and the Cougars had a bad evening. Bishop scored 13 points—a sizeable count for an ordinary player though not for him—but nine of these were from free throws. He's terrific, incidentally, at the foul line.

Don't get us wrong. There was nothing unsportsmanlike about the Beaver crowd. Indeed, when Bishop left the floor, the gang gave him a great hand. But it was an interesting demonstration of the penalties of fame, and what unfriendly fans, once they get "on" a player, can do to his game.

The World Today

By DeWITT MacKENZIE Associated Press World Traveler

ESSEN, Germany, Feb. 19—Just outside this bomb devastated city that was the home of the Krupp armament works—for generations the world's greatest producer of instruments of war—there is an extraordinary monument to rapacity and ruthlessness.

This is the baronial palace of the Krupps, known as the Villa Hugel. It is the last word in wanton lavishness and its estimated cost runs into millions of dollars.

What it may have cost in millions of money, however, doesn't interest this column so much as what it cost in millions of lives. For this house of Krupp was created from the profits of war piled up through the generations, and in this sense it was built on the bodies of men who died in battle that Krupps might prosper. History pins the responsibility for much of German aggression during the past century on Krupps and it will be history which will tell us how many conflicts this firm fed among Germany's neighbors.

Backed Three Wars

IT was Alfred Krupp, founder of the firm, who provided the sinews of war for Germany's onslaught against France in 1870. It was Krupps which carried Kaiser Wilhelm on its back to near victory over the allies in the first World War. And it was Krupps that was one of the main contributors—perhaps the main one—to Hitler's all but successful attempt to conquer Europe.

You experience an uncanny sensation as you walk through the vast oaken halls of this symbol of the Krupp success. Mrs. Mack and I both experienced the same thought independently of each other—that the price of all this was paid in blood. The whole atmosphere was vampirish.

Villa Hugel stands on a hilltop overlooking the ruins of the big city of Essen, which grew up about the Krupp works that stretch through the heart of the town for seven miles—an amazing industrial project. The villa has some fine points, but on the whole it is heavy and oppressive.

At The Willard — Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Avrit are registered at the Willard while visiting friends in Klamath Falls. They are former residents and Avrit was a member of the KUHS faculty, physical education department and football coach. He has just been released from the U. S. army.

SYMPATHY FOR ANIMALS

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore., (To the Editor) — In regard to the gentleman who was so concerned about a dog being sentenced to death, I want to tell the world no one would grieve over the death of most of the animals I see. I feel so sorry for most of them it would be a relief to know they were dead and out of their misery.

Seldom does anyone think they need water and very often the people who are supposed to be right up into the 400 class, make any bed for them at all. Even the poorest people have discarded clothes, blankets, at least a gunnysack, but they're too busy making an impression on their neighbors to take a half a minute to make their adored (?) pet comfortable, even in a small way.

And it gets cold here. It isn't any tropical climate as we all know. The poor stock cows and horses often have no shelter at all! Not even trees to break the force of the bitter cold wind all winter. Many of them aren't even wild animals who can find protection in the woods.

And who was optimistic enough to think that any thing would be done about it if the poisoning fiend was found? There's never been anything done about the most uncivilized treatment of animals. As in the case of the strangled horse. They just get some of their pals to swear it was necessary and if they have money enough to pay off the proper authorities, it's forgotten.

Or perhaps like Molatchi's police dog, the real owner and friend is away and unable to press the charges. Of course if the offender has "something on" the honorable D. A. and police chief, the case is dropped anyway.

The people who depend on their children to care for and feed rabbits and pigs, anything that's penned up. They should know that when it's left up to any child to do anything that's
