Customer Relations Face Vital Period

Reputations in the field of merchandising and customer relations will be made or harmed by the manner in which retail firms operate during the next 12 months of critical consumer goods shortages. Stewart W. Munroe of Detroit, general sales manager of the Chrysler division, Chrysler corporation, said here today.

Munroe is on the west coast conferring with Chrysler dealers on the 1946 program for Chrysler cars. In the case of the automobile Munroe said that there will undoubtedly be a "seller's market" for sometime to come, since there are many more people who want to buy cars than there are cars to sell. In a "seller's market," there is always a temptation to indulge in discrimination and favoritism. Chrysler division dealers are going to be absolutely fair in handling the delivery of customers orders for new cars, he said.

Our Home Town

The Washington Tradition

By EARL WHITLOCK

You and I, when we were small, were told again and again, that ancient tale about George Washington and his over-enthusiastic efforts with a hatchet which resulted in the demise of a perfectly good cherry tree, and about his subsequent truthful statement regarding the cause and effect of the incident. And we believed it all, too.

Then, along came the debunkers and we learned, later, that the tale was all a figment of the good Parson Weems' imagination, that there never was any cherry tree that George hacked to the ground. And the tale is less and less told to the small fry, as the years go by.

And I am just wondering if that is a good idea. Even granting that it never happened, isn't it good for a small boy to feel that there did once exist a being of such transcendent nobility that he would not lie to his father, though the offense had been great and the punishment loomed up pretty large? Parents think they are being extremely modern when they deny their children the old myths like Santa Claus and George Washington's cherry tree. But can any truth replace the pleasure and inspiration a kid gets out of the myths?
