Poultry Grade Must Be Upped

N. L. Bennion, extension poultryman from Oregon State college, emphasized that poultry growers to compete with higher grain costs and lower prices must continue to increase the quality of their products at a meeting held Monday night in the Shasta school.

Bennion stated that during the war period the western states have changed from an egg export section to an import section, and that the middle west has increased their egg production. Bennion advised growers to replenish their flocks each year with new pullets, emphasizing that pullets are in their peak of production during the months of higher prices, and that for each successive year a hen decreases production 25 per cent and is usually starting to moult during the months of higher prices. Bennion stated that growers should cull laying flocks continuously to conserve feed and obtain economical production.

Oregon was requested to raise 92 per cent as many chickens and 85 per cent as many turkeys in 1946 compared with 1945. Indications according to Bennion are that there may be a 15 per cent reduction in the number of chickens and turkeys produced in Oregon and a similar cut for the United States this year compared with a year ago at the present time and if this much a reduction takes place the demand may exceed the supply for market chicken eggs and market turkeys during the latter part of 1946.
