Detroit Thinks We Churn Out Butter

Klamath Falls gets into the news around the state and elsewhere as evidenced by a clipping which came to us from a Detroit, Michigan paper. An accompanying picture shows a grimaced feller churning away at a lunch counter and the caption reads: "Disturbed by the butter shortage, an office worker in Klamath Falls, Oregon, takes a small churn out to lunch with him every day. Securing milk from the restaurant manager, he churns up enough butter for the lunch hour crowd." Nobody around here got in on the butter milk, let alone the butter.

The George Ulrich's son, Major John Armond Ulrich, certainly has an interesting assignment from the war department. He leaves Bremerton, Wash., March 25, on the USS Pennsylvania for the South Pacific where he will take part in the atomic bomb test. He is in ordnance and in charge of all ordnance supplies used in the test. Mrs. Ulrich and young Johnny are in Bremerton now to be with him until he leaves. She and Johnny will then return to Holland, near Grants Pass, where they have lived these war years along with visits here.

We apologize for all that spring talk last week. This morning did not make us want anything but a shawl. In one of the recent issues of the Coos Bay Times they were busy plugging a spring opening. One of the attractive models was Mrs. Ted Balcom who lived here for a couple of years.

Clever little announcements were those distributed to guests at Phyllis Foster's betrothal tea last Saturday. They were in the form of prescriptions printed on thin parchment. Lt. Comdr. Joseph B. Parker Jr. is in the naval reserve medical corps and the wording was quite appropriate what with the groom-to-be a doctor, etc.

Joy Rolph of our staff writes Martha Shops as you know. One day this week she called an accountant and identified herself as "Martha Shops." As the conversation was terminated, the voice at the other end of the line said "Thank you for calling, Mrs. Shops." She'll not live that one down!

She wore an old-fashioned gown of marquisette and lace with a fingertip length veil bordered with pink, and carried a bouquet of pink rosebuds and white bouvardia with puffs and streamers of pink.
