By MALCOLM EPLEY

KLAMATH aviation men are voicing serious concern over the possibility that important equipment and other facilities placed on the Klamath airport by the navy may be removed from the field through surplus channels.

EPLEY

Their concern persists despite assurances by Mayor Ed Ostendorf that the city and the city airport commission will do all that is necessary to retain needed facilities for local use.

The aviation men point out, for example, that the steel hangar at the airport, one of the finest of its kind to be found anywhere, is movable. This hangar was shipped to Alaska early in the war, and was returned later to Klamath Falls to be set up at the navy air station.

Recently, there was an item in the news that a large airport at Chicago intended to purchase a number of steel hangars which had been set up at various points in the country for military use. The Klamath men want every loophole plugged through which some such deal might be made by the Chicagoans, or some other outfit, to acquire the Klamath hangar, or any other facility now at the field which could be used in efficient operation of the Klamath airport.

There is a lot of equipment at the field which should remain here, such as crash and fire equipment, the hangars, a number of the buildings, and many other items.

Reclamation Acts

THE reclamation bureau wants a number of buildings now on the field, and has made formal application for them. There is no competition between the bureau and the city, however, the bureau having checked with the city before asking for the facilities it can use. Recent reports from Washington have indicated the reclamation bureau is going to get what it wants.

Mayor Ostendorf is very positive in his declaration that the city's interests are being fully protected, and that no one need worry. Everyone will feel better, however, when the city has made formal requests for the facilities it should have, and has taken every possible action to press its claims. There is no apparent reason for delay. The reclamation bureau, which has a similar interest, has already proceeded.

The city has moved cautiously with respect to assuming responsibilities for the airport. This policy may be advisable, but certainly it need not prevent the city from moving immediately to obtain definite commitments on every facility at the field which will be needed in its operation as a municipal enterprise.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, April 10 — Mr. Truman has a faculty of making the sensational appear to be commonplace. His Army Day dictum was popularly (and erroneously) written off as a re-hash of his old policies. The people thought his fear of a mid-east war-break was calculated to build up wind pressure for war department appropriations which will be coming along in a few weeks (the budget is now working on the figures). Congressmen surmised he was trying to crowd them into action on his unification, draft and youth bills which have been lagging. The republicans criticized him a little on this, but his democratic leaders did not comment.

The president intended his speech to be more than this. Newsmen were tipped privately in advance that it would be most important. All radio networks were lined up to carry it as a major address.

It was, in fact, a declaration of a strong new foreign policy, which could be summed up, as one official recently quoted in this column summed it up, in one sentence: "If we are going to protect small nations, we had better start protecting them."

Russian Progress

IN the face of Russian revolutionary progress in Iran, and its threats against Turkey and Iraq, the president demanded respect for "the sovereignty and integrity of the countries of the Near and Middle East" against "coercion or penetration." On that very day, the government, people and press of Turkey were shouting high, about the arrival of the U. S. battleship Missouri in Turkey with the body of their late ambassador. Turkey well knows she cannot resist threats of Russian penetration without the American navy, and she saw the big Missouri in that light, and only secondarily as a good-will funeral ship.

The president spoke repeatedly of the "responsibility" of our army to protect the "nations which are not strong enough individually or collectively to withstand powerful aggression." While he urged "reconciliation" through UNO, he mentioned the subject in connection with army maintenance. The bustling connection may have escaped its proper importance in congress, and with the public at large, but it must have been properly measured in Moscow (where we are now represented by Eisenhower's trusted and efficient chief of staff from the European invasion as ambassador) and in other diplomatic quarters.

Come To Grip

FRANKLY, there are some congressmen, who think we should come to our strongest possible grip with Moscow right now. "We had better get it over with," they can be heard to say privately. Mr. Truman's new policy seems to leave this up to the Russians. Moscow can decide whether to press its advertised demands upon nearby nations now, and test Mr. Truman's proclamation of our "responsibility," or wait until affairs quiet down in coming months or years, and then proceed to accomplish objectives which she has announced. Personally I think, if she is faced with firmness, she will wait, but that is not the important thing. The steps already taken provide Russia much choice.

SIDE GLANCES

"Let's start a jurisdictional dispute at home and let me strike!"

STATIC

Klamath sportsmen will have a chance tonight, 8:30, to listen in on one of the few outdoor programs on the air. It's The Fishing and Hunting Club, heard over KFLW. Experted by such well-known authorities as David Newell, editor of Field and Stream, and Jim Hurley, outdoors columnist for the New York Daily Mirror, the program presents a well-founded outdoorsman's half hour. Made up mostly of material furnished by listeners, the show always has a whopper told by a fisherman, advice from well-known guides and sportsmen, and human interest stuff. Accurate facts concerning the habits of American fish and game are handed on to the public by the guest artists, along with helpful hints for the hopeful nimrod. Both Hurley and Newell can, and will, draw on years of sporting experience afield and afloat to give tips from choice spots on the American continent.

With fishing season a few scant days off, it looks like the anglers around here at any rate will be breaking out their heavy parkas and going at it in a grim spirit of fish and freeze at the same time. In time one could probably get used to waking up to a young blizzard and going home to a warm afternoon, but it would take a lot of doing.

The pelicans seem to be coming back. Yesterday there were about 25 or 30 of the big birds doing a very thorough job of fishing off Algoma point. So far they seem to be sticking to the upper lake, as very few, if any, have been seen along Ewanna or the Link river fishing grounds. Won't be long, tho, till we'll see them drilling again. Hope they bring a little warm

COURT SITUATION
KLAMATH FALLS, Ore. (To the Editor)—Judge Vandenberg complains loudly because Mr. Humble did not come into court personally and hear the judge's vituperation and abuse, knowing full well that Mr. Humble had no opportunity to answer. Why did not Vandenberg get off the bench, go to Humble, man to man, and discuss the matter?
Yours truly,

High School Will Close On May 31

MERRILL, April 10 — High school students will go to classes two weeks longer this spring than students in the elementary school to make up two weeks time lost last fall during the potato harvest. Grade school is scheduled to close May 17 and final date for classes for the high school is May 31.

Graduation is planned for the evening of May 29 with one of the smallest senior classes in the history of the school to receive diplomas. Seven graduates, whose names were not announced by Principal George Elliott this week, will complete four years of high school work.

Dolly Dennis will be valedictorian and Melvin Johnson will be salutatorian. Baccalaureate services will be the evening of May 26 and invitations will be in the mail this week for the annual senior ball, May 3, Baldy Evans' orchestra will play. Theme of the ball has not been announced.
