

State Meat Inspection Called Bad

PORTLAND, May 29 (AP)—Charges of a general break down in Oregon's meat inspection and sanitation enforcement will be brought before the Oregon Association of Public Health Workers here today.

Dr. F. Sydney Hansen, Multnomah county health officer, said county health officers of the state reported the state's meat inspection system had virtually ceased to operate and that in some instances sick cattle were sold for slaughter and went into the retail trade.

Dr. M. J. Belton, director of the state department of agriculture's division of animal industry, said yesterday he would "second" the charges of inadequacies of the state program to protect the public.

No Paid Inspectors
The state officer explained Oregon does not have salaried meat inspectors, but authorizes veterinarians to approve meat slaughtered outside federally inspected plants. The veterinarians are paid by the slaughterers who call them in for inspections, Dr. Belton said.

Thornton T. Swenson, U. S. department of agriculture, reported only a small percentage of the state's meat supply was slaughtered under conditions the federal government considered adequate. He said the few plants recognized included those of Swift, Armour and Stearn and Welch in Portland and the Valley Packing company in Salem.

Swenson said the city inspection systems of Eugene, Coos Bay, Portland and Klamath Falls also were considered fairly adequate.

Dr. Belton said the next legislature should correct the faulty codes of the state agriculture department.

Tulelake Units Given To FHA

Thirty-three apartment houses at the Tulelake Jap camp were turned over to the federal housing authority Tuesday, U. S. bureau of reclamation officials stated today. It is probable the FHA plans to move these houses to another location regardless of the urgent need for them where they are, it was reported.

This group of 33 units was formerly used by administration personnel of the camp. Mexican laborers are being moved into the military area of the camp by Tulelake Growers association, to help in weeding and thinning beets and onions. This action was taken by permission of the general land office, Washington, D. C.

Oregon Roads Open In June

SALEM, May 29 (AP)—Five state highways which have been closed for the winter will be opened during the first half of June, State Highway Engineer R. M. Baldock said today.

The opening is later than usual because of the deepest snow in the mountains in many years.

The most important of the roads, the McKenzie highway which goes over the Cascades between Eugene and Bend, will be opened June 15 while the Mt. Hood loop will be opened June 10.

The Crater Lake and the Crater Lake-Diamond Lake highways will be opened June 15, while the east and west Diamond Lake route will be cleared June 5.

No opening dates were set for the opening of the Sand Creek-Crater Lake and Century Drive highways.

MEMORIAL DAY
By EARL WHITLOCK
To cemeteries all over the nation today, there will go uncountable thousands of Americans to do honor to fellow-Americans who have made the last great sacrifice for the country we all love. Reverently they will pause before the graves of veterans of the Civil War, of the Spanish War, of World Wars I and II.

And I would ask you who read this to think well and reverently of those other graves, marked by the regular rows of small white crosses, on a score of small islands scattered about the broad beaches of the Pacific ocean—of those others in Europe and in North Africa and in Asia and in the Middle East.

To all of them on this and every day of our lives, our love, and our tears.

Next Monday Mr. Whitlock of the Earl Whitlock Funeral Home will comment on "About what Constitutes Good Style."

Additional Navy Men Return From Service

Still more local navy men are receiving honorable discharges and returning to their homes in the Klamath basin.

Latest to receive discharges are Eldon E. Storey, S 1/c, Rt. 1, Box 644; Edward E. Sawyer, S 1/c, 5544 Independence; Melvin D. Mechem, Y 2/c, Rt. 2; Kenneth L. Hartley, S 1/c, 3137 Cannon; George F. LaScalze, AOM 3/c, 2209 Union, and John T. Rainwater, GM 3/c, 3210 Cannon, Klamath Falls.

Also discharged recently was James D. Givan, SOM 2/c, Box 134, Bonanza.

Boundary Dam Work Delayed

Work is progressing slowly on Boundary dam investigations at Lost river on the California-Oregon state line, E. Laton Stephens, superintendent of the U. S. bureau of reclamation, stated today. He said the work on investigations is being delayed due to a limited crew of diamond drill operators.

At present a small force is engaged in making preliminary investigations and borings under Ray C. Gosset on the dam which, if constructed, will enable the bureau to reclaim more land in the Tulelake area, control spring floods and proceed with work on the Coppeck Bay project.

This proposed dam would also serve as auxiliary water storage for Clear Lake reservoir.

Additional experienced diamond drill operators would be welcomed on the Boundary dam investigation work, Stephens stated, and any such men may obtain further information at the USBR office, federal building.
