

Groesbeck Says Barracks Project Not 'Abandoned'

The state board of higher education has not "abandoned" plans for use of the Klamath Marine Barracks as an educational unit, R. C. Groesbeck, Klamath member of the board, insisted on his return from this week's meeting in Portland.

"There was too much finality in some of the headlines on that story," Groesbeck said. "The board left the door open for possible later use of the facility. 'Deferred' would have been a better word.

"It is still possible that if the veteran load gets too great for the other schools that the board will undertake a program at Klamath Falls."

Groesbeck said that two principal factors contributed to the decision of the board not to try to organize the center here for the fall term.

Availability Uncertain

The first was the fact the barracks had not been turned over by the war assets administration, and there was no certainty as to when the property would actually be available.

The other main point was that the board had received no assurance of money from the state for operation of the school.

Other lesser obstacles to the program were listed by Groesbeck as follows:

Potential difficulties in obtaining a staff for the unit if it was organized. He said that a staff for a strictly vocational school might have been found, but that instructors for general education are hard to find for schools already running.

Members Conservative

Ultra-conservatism on the part of some members of the board. They were hesitant about spending money on the Klamath project.

Development of an extension unit at Vanport, near Portland, carrying out in part the purposes of the proposed Klamath project.

Although a strong supporter of the Klamath plan, Groesbeck said that the board ran into so many difficulties that it seemed impossible to get a school going in time for the fall term.

FAN MY BROW

PITTSBURGH, June 13 (AP)—While the mercury soared toward 90 degrees in the city's first 1946 heat wave, a policeman in Central station mopped his brow and gasped:

"Whew, it's like a furnace in here. I can't stand it."

He wasn't kidding. Someone had fired the furnace full blast.

WAA Opens New Office At Redding

REDDING, Calif., June 13—War Assets Administration announced today that it has opened an office in Room 33 at 1407 California street in Redding where veterans and others eligible to buy surplus government property may obtain information. Veterans also will be able to obtain certification of their right to buy surplus.

The Redding office, one of several opened throughout the San Francisco region by the WAA to aid prospective buyers, will be in charge of a World War II veteran, Edward M. Dean. He was in the navy for four years, three of which were spent in sea duty in the South Pacific, and was a disbursing storekeeper, first class. Before the war Dean was a city employee and since his discharge has been office manager for the Redding Municipal Utilities.

Veterans of World War II will be able to obtain certification at the Redding office to buy surplus property for their own business, agricultural or professional use. Under the newly amended law, certain designated scarce items may be purchased by veterans for personal use and these certification also will be made at the field office. On the list of items set aside exclusively for sale to veterans are trucks of 2½ tons or less, jeeps, certain types of tractors, and a few other items.

lie: $50,000 warehouse, Hudson-Duncan and company at Roseburg; $7,000 restaurant, Salem, George N. Hawkins.

E. T. Crawford Reappointed

E. T. Crawford of Merrill, has been re-appointed wage stabilization assistant for southern Oregon and the northern portions of Siskiyou and Modoc counties in California for the year 1946.

The labor branch of the wage stabilization board has established an office, of which Crawford will be in charge, on the second floor of the First National Bank building in Merrill.

The wage ceilings established and issued by the director of labor, war food administration, on June 9, 1945, are still in force and have not been modified or amended in any particular. For the information of employers of agricultural labor in the Klamath basin there are on file with the county agent's office in Klamath Falls, the Tulelake Grower's office in Tulelake, and at the wage stabilization office in Merrill, copies of the regulations and schedules of ceiling wages permissible in this area.

Salem Alumina Plant Will Continue Work

WASHINGTON, June 13 (AP)—The government owned alumina plant at Salem, Ore., will continue operation to produce ammonium sulphate for fertilizer until December 31, the Reconstruction Finance corporation reported today.

Sen. Cordon (R-Ore.) said the action, which extends the plant's production period from June 30, was made to make available fertilizer for northwest agriculture and possibly for export. The plant has been operated by the Columbia Metals company.
