Today's Roundup

FOR the next few weeks, the skipper of this column is going to be a tourist, and most of what appears here will be in travelogue style.

Our travel letters, according to present plans, will start from Lakeview, one of our favorite towns. From there we go on east across the continent to Chicago, Detroit, and New York, and then home again.

We're making the trip by automobile, and our role will be just that of a guy from Klamath Falls, Ore., roaming across the country. We make no claims of being a seasoned and sophisticated traveler; we'll do a lot of plain and simple gawking, and just report the results to those hardy souls willing to follow us on this page.

Three years ago, we made a trip to the east coast by train, and our meanderings as reported here received a good deal of friendly comment upon our return. That encourages us to do it again. The results will have to speak for themselves.

IN becoming a temporary tourist, we're joining what is expected to become a nationwide move to the open road. It may not come in such great proportions this year as previously expected, due to car and tire shortages and reconversion problems that have created uncertainties that discourage travel. But as things straighten out, there seems certain to be a bright movement of tourist cars throughout the country.

On the Pacific coast will benefit tremendously from the tourist trade in the next few years. Oregon experts on this situation talk in terms of $100,000,000 a year. Klamath optimists believe that if Oregon gets that much from the tourist business, we'll get $10,000,000. Whatever the amount, it will be new money poured into our area, helping to make profits, wages and jobs. What we do to encourage it is good investment.

Doing Our Part THERE is a good deal of talk of impressive highway signs, tourist literature, maps, and other methods of promoting tourist trade.

All of this helps, of course, but the most important thing of all is to give the Klamath country a wide reputation for friendly hospitality and good "stopping over" facilities.

If we do that, we'll get the business. Our road set-up is excellent and getting still better. Our natural attractions are great. We are on the shortest and best route into Crater lake from California—the greatest source of tourist travel into Oregon.

The stage is set for a great tourist business—if we do our part.

THE sensational arrest in Kashmir of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, president-elect of the powerful all-India congress, had the unhappy result of halting the negotiations over Indian independence at New Delhi at a crucial moment, but in the long run the repercussions may have a salutary effect.

The incident is endowed with all the mystery and drama for which we are accustomed to look in Hindustan. The Pandit Nehru—a Kashmiri Brahmin and so of the highest caste in Hinduism—proceeded to the dream-land of Kashmir ("pale hands I love"), which is his native state, on an extraordinary mission.

That mission hasn't been fully explained but, to use Nehru's own language he intended "to put an end to the complications arising from the policy of the Kashmir government." Specifically, it appears that he was going to aid in the defense of Sheik Abdullah and others accused of sedition against the maharajah, Sir Hari Singh. And our story wouldn't be complete if we didn't mention here that the maharajah is one of the world's richest men, with a private fortune estimated at $200,000,000, and has a decided penchant for the good things of life.

Hindu Rules Moslems HOWEVER, the real significance of the situation lies in the fact that his highness is a Hindu who is ruling over a population of some 4,000,000 who are almost wholly Moslem. And here we have the blueblood Hindu Nehru—who next to Gandhi is the most powerful personality in India—rushing to the assistance of Moslems, although Moslems and Hindus are in theory mortal enemies.

Nehru had been warned by the Kashmir government to keep away from the state. But the pandit is a man of persistence and great courage, and he went ahead. He was arrested at the frontier and is said to have been wounded in the face with a bayonet. Later the state government stated that he was free to leave Kashmir when he chose.

With Nehru's arrest the all-India congress registered its indignation by postponing indefinitely its decision whether to accept the British plan for a provisional Indian government. That was a shock, inasmuch as the protracted negotiations between England and the Indian leaders had seemed about to bring agreement.

Widespread Protest HOWEVER, there was more to come. Great cities throughout India—Bombay, Calcutta, Karachi, Madras—were thrown into confusion by strikes and demonstrations against the arrest of Nehru. Only one other man in India could have inspired such a tribute, and that is Mahatma Gandhi whose humble disciple Nehru is.

And what are the lessons to be learned from all this? In the first place we shall do well to note that mighty India's four hundred millions are awake and on the move. The masses are becoming political minded, as the widespread reaction to Nehru's arrest indicates. Along with this, of course, India has been making seven-league strides in education and industry.

It's of the highest importance, too, that we find many of the country's foremost aristocrats—of whom Nehru is one—devoting themselves to the advancement of the masses. It's doubly important that more and more the Hindus and the Moslems are finding ground for common endeavor.

Dockhand Shortage Eased In Portland PORTLAND, Ore., June 22 (AP)—A shortage of longshoremen and dockworkers here appeared alleviated today, and carloads of flour which had been collecting demurrage charges were being loaded, the port coordinator said.

A call for more longshoremen came, however, from some lower Columbia river ports. Shipments piled up here during the waterfront dispute.

"I don't see why you won't let me drive just because it's a new car—they're turning out new machines at a pretty fast clip now!"

in the evening one noticed that the sidewalks between Fifth and Seventh streets were going under and all the street corners were in a wading condition. Reminds one a good deal of the storm of 1941, when it filled the underpass and generally flooded everything in town out. There'll probably be a couple more before the weather and summer both decide to simmer down.

Guest artist for the Ford Sunday Evening Hour (the last broadcast of this series, incidentally) will be the young man pictured above—Eugene List. List has been in the news many times, being the young staff sergeant, I believe, who has played for Stalin, Churchill and the late President Roosevelt.

"Kings of the Highway" will be the title of Sunday's Warriors of Peace program, and will feature George Hicks, famous ABC war correspondent as commentator. The army ground forces, the men who slugged the enemy from the mud of the roads and fields will be the honored heroes of the script.

The airlines question goes on boiling in the pot with only an occasional puff of steam to show that anything has changed. If hopes mean anything, however, we'll have planes through here by mid-July as planned. Klamath Falls women can then realize a few dreams about San Francisco, or at least more frequently than they do now.

Yesterday's little showing of weather maybe cleared up the atmosphere for a few days. Every time Klamath goes into one of those sticky, goopy heat spells it always ends with a hailstorm. The one of yesterday seems to have been fairly well localized in the town area. Reports come in that the hailstones were the size of small marbles on the hill, and they weren't small by any means down on the river. Driving down the street at six o'clock

Loan Increase Asked By DAV

PENDELTON, June 22 (AP)—Increase of state veteran loan limitations to $10,000 was recommended today by Oregon Disabled Veterans along with other resolutions suggesting new tasks for the state department of veterans' affairs.

Delay in granting loans to veterans was the reason cited for asking that "a well-organized division of appraisers in the department of veterans' affairs" be given responsibility for appraisal service now done by the state land board.

The present loan limit of $3000 was criticized as too low in view of current property prices. Its increase to $10,000 and appraisal changes will be sought at the next state legislative session.

Lending institutions were criticized for lack of interest which "prevents veterans in some localities from receiving full consideration" on their applications for loans.

Other resolutions recommended that veterans be allowed to pick their own physician for out-patient treatment, protest alleged abuses by the civil service commission in employing veterans, asked a change in DAV official caps to distinguish members from those of the American Legion, suggested the government pay a proportional part of insurance premiums for partially disabled veterans, and asked that veterans administration permit home-town dental examination.
