HERSHEY, Neb.—(Travel Correspondence)—A trip like this would be a grand thing for every American schoolboy.

He had heard and read about the vast prairies, of course, and today, after leaving Cheyenne, our trek led for a while through great stretches of rolling grass land, off to the horizon on all sides.

He had heard and read about the vast prairies, of course, and today, after leaving Cheyenne, our trek led for a while through great stretches of rolling grass land, off to the horizon on all sides.

Even as we talked about the conquest of the prairie by hardy farm folk we moved into partially cultivated areas, in some places, the tractors and the plows were out apparently turning the sod for the first time.

We were coming down the south fork of the Platte. Little by little the crop character changes. There were more fields of corn, alfalfa, potatoes.

Along The Way A breakfast at Rock Springs this morning, a man from Medford, Ore., sat down beside us, and the talk about Oregon politics and southern Oregon affairs was like a breakfast at the Pelican at home.

It was U. S. 30 for us all the way today. We crossed the continental divide near Rawlins without realizing it; there was some disappointment for my companion, who knows mountains, to go through this easy stretch of the "mighty Rockies."

A quick drive around Cheyenne, and a visit to the capitol (our third on this jaunt) and we took off for Nebraska, my native state. We were too eager to get along. After dinner at Sidney, where accommodations were available, we decided to take a chance and drove on through the evening.

But we were prepared for that. On advice of Frank Jenkins and other travelers, we had

The World Today

By J. M. ROBERTS JR.

WITTINGLY or unwittingly—probably the latter—the United States has added to the hurdles which Vice Premier Mikolajczyk must clear in tomorrow's plebiscite if his Polish peasant party is to escape the grave danger of dissolution.

Mikolajczyk's opponents, the "Moscow" group which controls the government, will hardly fail to make full capital of this week's reinstatement of a $30,000,000 loan which had been held up because of Polish censorship of American news dispatches, failure of Poland to publish collateral agreements insuring free political activities, and the withholding of the texts of Poland's economic agreements with other countries, including Russia.

To get this picture clearly, one must remember that Mikolajczyk is the only important Warsaw official who was one of the "London Poles" who supported and were supported by the allies during the war.

Hand-Picked Government

RUSSIA broke with the "London Poles" during the war, and near its close installed in Poland a completely hand-picked government.

This new government began operating at Lublin before Warsaw was liberated. After the German surrender, Mikolajczyk was admitted to the circle only upon strong representations to Moscow by the United States and Britain that the Warsaw government was not representative of the Polish people.

He and his Polish peasant party are distinctly the major assets of the western powers in Poland. He already has been consistently harassed by government raids on his party centers, some units of which have been dissolved, by political assassinations and arrests, and by the organization of a militia hastily trained to give the government a quarter million armed men at the polls tomorrow.

U. S. Satisfaction Implied

TEN, on Wednesday, came re-instatement of the U. S. loan, an action which could only carry the implication in Poland that the United States is satisfied with the present government to which the Polish peasant party represents the only real opposition aside from the national armed forces and other underground irregulars who have injured their own cause by banditry and violence.

It appears that the state department acted in rather routine fashion on the loan after receiving assurances from Warsaw that its objections would be met, and without consideration of the political factor.

At any rate, a few hours after an inquiry, on this score, the state department announced that another loan of $40,000,000 planned by the export-import bank had been held up—although bank officials said they knew nothing of it—presumably until the Poles actually carry out their promises.

It looks like the pre-plebiscite $50,000,000 authorization was a slip which adds materially to the danger that the Polish peasant party may not live to play a major role whenever national elections are held.

first infantry division rank as probably the two finest Doughboy divisions ever to serve under the American flag. There are jealousy and rivalry between many combat divisions, but I never heard a soldier question or criticize the battle performance of either the first or third infantry.

What makes such outfits great? Training, training, training—and tradition, the tradition of victory that makes pinched and hopeless men carry their battle field goal because defeat has never had a part in their story.

Without this basic training and tradition the soldiers of the third couldn't have stuck to the long road from Casablanca to Berchtesgaden, a bitter road marked by such bloody signposts as Sicily, Volturno, Anzio, Mignano, the Vosges, the Colmar pocket and Nuernberg.

The third division was the first activated in 1917, but its component regiments—the seventh, fifteenth and thirtieth—have battle records that go back to the War of 1812.

The Coos County rodeo, and the only one in that county this year, will be held at Myrtle Point on July 13th and 14th. It's given by the Myrtle Point Vaqueros, and promises to be a pretty good show.

Even the government gets teed off occasionally. One official of the News and Herald received a letter from Washington today, complete with imposing envelope, stamps, seals and what have you, and contained one (1) sheet of blank paper. What next?

Tomorrow's programs will include Counterspy, this week telling the case of the Overseas Brides. It all has to do with army wives on their way overseas to join their husbands and how a smooth racketeer pries loose all their ready cash.

Third saw action at Chateau Thierry and took part later in four offensives during which it won its nickname, "Rock of the Marne."

In the last war it set a record of 431 days in the line and made more amphibious landings than any other division in the European theater.

It did so well that army commanders, faced with a new campaign, began with: "Well, I'll need the third division."

Always Came Through They all wanted the third because the third always came through. It was a reputation sustained by blood and paid off with more honors than came to any comparable outfit.

Sometimes the weary men of the third wished they didn't have the victory habit. It was awarded some 8300 hero awards, including one fourth of the Congressional Medal of Honor given to all the American ground forces—more than the entire marine corps.

Its passing may also symbolize the end of Doughboy warfare as it was known in two world wars.
