Scarcity Of Good Girdles Brings Woe To Womanhood

By EDNA KILLMEYER

Enough to make any postwar reconversion expert quail is the woe-filled cry from feminine America who, almost to a woman, is trooping to her favorite shop in quest of a good, pre-war quality girdle.

Viewing the girdle situation in Klamath Falls shops, one may conclude that the American woman, locally at least, is far better off than a few months ago and especially during the war.

The synthetic, make-do fabrics which were a much too common sight on the shelves of many a women's apparel store, are gradually being replaced by satin, lastex and two-way stretch elastic in very limited quantities. Of materials used in foundation garments, lace is almost off the market with the result that frills and ruffles are now made of nylon marquisette which is none too easy to get.

One local shop reports that the market is flooded with cheaply, poorly-made products manufactured by new fly-by-night firms who stress quantity rather than quality. National brands from established firms, while definitely on the scarce list, are arriving in small shipments.

With a change in weather, woman's choice in foundation garments gets a new slant. Corsettes report that many a woman these days is looking for a light, soft, cool type girdle for wear with casual summer clothes. Let the first leaf fall in autumn and she switches to a heavier, more substantial undergarment for the dressier fall apparel.

The girl with the average not-too-good, not-too-bad figure can get by quite well on the present stock of girdles in the stores, but her sister with the "problem" figure will have to resort to exercise and diet. Firm, long-length foundations are well-nigh off the market.

With the latest fashion trend of sleek, close-fitting dresses, snug, pencil skirts, and trim suits, the average woman can't fool anyone with her figure failings. If she were the lithe, long-legged slender girl who typifies a fashion model, her problems would disappear, but the average American woman retains the short, rather stockily-built stature which is far removed from the Petty girl class.

Enthusiastically greeted was the return of the zipper, and Miss and Mrs. America bade a not too fond farewell to snaps and hooks.

Manufacturers are lending a ray of hope to the situation with their announcements that perhaps by fall, heavier girdles and corsets, and a greater quantity of lighter garments, will be available.

The corset manufacturer is unable to state whether the rise in girdle sales is due to an increase in the girth of women or an increased awareness of women to their girth! Let the chips fall where they may.

Couple Drown In Coos Bay

COOS BAY, June 29 (P)—Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Bartruff, La-comb, Ore., drowned yesterday when a rowboat swamped in Coos Bay across from Empire, but their companions were rescued.

Frank Peoples, Silverton, clung to the boat, and Mrs. Peoples was saved by her brother-in-law, Ralph Peoples of Silverton, Democratic nominee for state labor commissioner. He and his family were in a boat nearby.

Coast guardmen found Mrs. Bartruff's body but still were searching for that of her husband.

Woman In Hospital After Triple Crash

BAKER, June 29 (P)—An accident involving a bus, a Consolidated Freightways truck and a car driven by Carl Osland, Salem, resulted in Mrs. Osland's being taken to a hospital here.

The bus driver, David Hennis, Caldwell, Idaho, was trying to stop on a one-way traffic lane on Highway No. 30, under repair, when the bus struck the car, which swerved into the truck's path, state police said.

No one but Mrs. Osland was reported hurt.
