Japan-Born Bride Freed

SEATTLE, July 26 (AP)—A precedent for admission of women married by servicemen in Japan was set here yesterday when a Japan-born bride of a former American serviceman won her freedom to join him in the United States.

Federal Judge Paul McCormick of Los Angeles granted the writ of habeas corpus sought by John A. Bouiss of Portland, Ore. His bride, Mrs. Helene Emilie Bouiss, who has spent nearly three months in the immigration detention quarters here, was born of a German father and a Japanese mother. She claimed the Swedish nationality of her previous husband.

The case centered about the immigration authorities' claim that, being half Japanese, she is ineligible to become an American citizen.

Bouiss' attorneys successfully contended that regardless of whether or not she can become a citizen, she was entitled to enter the country as non-quota immigrant after marriage to a U. S. citizen in the armed forces. Judge McCormick said that an act of 1945 "clearly expressed" the intention of congress "to keep intact all consanguine and family relationships of honorably discharged servicemen."
