Ager is a pioneer in the Tulelake area, going there in 1929. He has been in the grocery business for 11 years and built the brick store in Tulelake six years ago. With one of the first businesses in that part of the country, he has watched the development of Tulelake from the beginning. The building has just been remodeled and a retail frozen food service was opened Saturday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Ager and children will continue to make their home in Tulelake. Ager plans to devote his time to farming as he has extensive farming interests there. MacEnderney owns Mac's grocery store in Dunsmuir and will operate it along with the Tulelake store. Although he will remain in Dunsmuir, he will be in Tulelake three days each week. Lemon Juice for Breakfast
KLAMATH FALLS. (To The Editor)—I have just read the article of R. D. Dolin in "The Herald and News" and am sending in my personal opinion.

Evidently, the man or woman, whichever it may be, drinks lemon juice for breakfast to make said parties so sour. In my opinion these so-called hoodlums and screwballs will not turn into what they are termed. I know fellows that are married and have fine families, they are growing beards. They were born here and are living up very well to the name of Klamath Falls. I wouldn't term them as screwballs or hoodlums, as R. D. Dolin puts it.

Is he or she afraid to go out at night? If he or she is a resident of this town, why put a climax on everyone else's fun? Since when in U. S. A. is there a law against such a thing as John Doe walking down the street with a beard? Even the police is growing a beard and I give them plenty of credit for it. If anyone got their skull cracked, it would be because some person stepped up and asked for it. Why should there be any violence as long as everyone minds their own business.

Fellows that just got out of service and are still giving their blood for donations, fellows that went over and fought for Oregon are growing beards and having fun doing it. They like the teasing and ribbing they get. Maybe R. D. Dolin was in the service too. If so, more power to him or her. But why put a danger on someone else's fun because they are sour to get into things.

Personally I think it's a great idea that people want to live up to the standard of Oregon. As for R. D. Dolin, I have my opinion of him or her and it can't be put in print.

Yours Sincerely,
M. D. HANNA

WANTS OUTDOOR POOL

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore. (To the Editor)—It appears that after 15 years or more of struggle the people of Klamath Falls are at last getting a chance to vote themselves a swimming pool. But somebody has messed the deal up so much that the odds are that these people are going to have to vote "No."

Plans as they have been drawn up by "Happy" Hambrick and his recreation committee call for an outlay of a mere $175,000 to build a closed-in swimming pool to be operated the year around, supposedly.

Holy Mike, doesn't anybody in the city government have enough sense to know that people won't go swimming in the cold weather we have from about October to April. For half or one-third the proposed cost the city could build a bigger and much nicer outdoor, open-air pool to be used for about four months during our summer, which is warm. Why heck! Half the fun of swimming is sitting in the sun, and you can't do that in an indoor pool.

Many other nearby cities, Ashland, Salem or Redding for example have profitable outdoor pools. Even Redmond, which is at a higher altitude than Klamath, operates a successful outdoor pool. Probably the most important thing is that, while $175,000 may not sound like very much money to Mr. Hambrick and his friends, it looks like an awful lot of money to an awful lot of taxpayers who do most of the voting. And the way the swimming pool measure is written ten right now, the chances are it isn't going to pass. Personally I'd a lot rather have a nice outdoor pool for sure, than to risk not having one at all.

REPLY TO DOLIN
KLAMATH FALLS, Ore. (To the Editor): Go back to your desk, Mr. Dolin, your flowers or books—whatever it is that keeps that brilliant mind of yours occupied. Please carry on and cease to worry about the vigilantes ever wasting their time on you.

You seem to forget that this is all in a spirit of fun, so therefore you have no part in it as you obviously lack that good old American sense of humor.

One of the greatest assets that the American serviceman had overseas (I'll venture to say the main thing that kept him from going nuts) was his true, unheralded, American sense of humor. I'll wager that ever 50 percent of your 'hoodlum whiskerinos' are veterans of this war and if you'd care to count in the First World War it will amount to more than that.

I, for one (and there are hundreds more in Klamath Falls like me) was not drafted or even tried to dodge the draft. I enlisted, and though I never saw service outside of the good old United States I still pulled three years of KP, and don't get the idea that it was disciplinary action, either. My record is pure and spotless. However, I still kept my sense of humor through this siege which enables me to laugh heartily at your feeble, poorly-timed, sourpuss effort to disrupt a little innocent fun.

No, Mr. Dolin, I doubt very much that the vigilantes will molest you. It is more likely that they expect to find and furnish a little amusement which this world sorely needs. After accounting you, I am of the notion that they'll wonder pityingly just what it was that happened in your life to make you such a poor sport, and such a colossal dud.

S. M. CARTER

P.S.—Please, Mr. Dolin, whatever weapon it is that you are packing to protect yourself from these "hoodlums," please! don't gun me down, as I have a wife, a child and very little insurance.

S.M.C.

To the blind eyes of love,
(For they shall know no beauty)

My darling against your eyes
the stars they haven't a chance
For when you were born
the angels danced and pranced
on steeds of silver and gold.

So bold were they that the light from the brightest star they took and threw it into your eyes, the eyes I idolize
the eyes that I adore
Blind now and forever more

The light now within those eyes will shine forever more.
H. L. LUCAS.

MARGARET JANE TAGGS

Klamath Girl Writes Verse

Margaret Jane Taggs, newcomer to Klamath Falls, is the author of a book of light verse, "We Solemnly Swore," to be published soon by Dorrance and company of Philadelphia. She has just read the final proofs and it is expected that the book will be out by the end of this year.

She served three years in the WAC, stationed most of the time in Washington and her book will deal humorously with army life from the WAC point of view. It is a collection of material written largely while she was in the service. Her light verse appeared frequently in Yank, the army magazine.

She has lived in Klamath Falls since May and is employed by the local office of the unemployment compensation division, which is now housed in the U. S. employment service offices at 242 Main.

A brand-new flame-proofing substance made from coal chemicals will soon be on the market for flame-proofing aprons, mattresses, draperies, upholstery materials and other textiles.

Food today is the most sought after commodity in the world, and Americans are challenged to win the global war against hunger. Growing a garden is one way to help.
