Navy Training Deadline Nears

There is only a short time left for high school seniors and graduates to apply for the college training program offered by the navy, according to Vernon Chitwood of the local navy recruiting office.

Applications for training must be received by December 17, Chitwood said, and the examinations for entrance to the new navy college training program will be held throughout the nation on January 18.

More than 5000 young men, those standing highest in the competitive examinations, will be given four years of college training free, with books, tuition, normal fees and $50 a month furnished by the navy.

Applicants may have their choice of two training programs, the naval reserve officers training corps, or the naval aviation college program.

Those desiring applications should contact their high school principal or the recruiting office, Chitwood stated.
