Today's Roundup

REGON'S lawmakers, who go into session Monday, must be tired already. All legislative prognostications have dwelt at length on the enormous problems that confront the senators and representatives, with generous use of such adjectives as "critical," "crucial," "controversial" and "challenging" applied to the issues that seem certain to arise in a session that some say will go all of 70 tortoise days.

EPLEY

Our good friend Paul Harvey, who covers the legislature for the Associated Press, writes that the legislature will be the most experienced in the state's history, but "it will need that experience to cope with the momentous problems of taxation, budget, labor, schools, unemployment compensation, industrial insurance and highways." You see what we mean.

Just to think about it all is enough to give one a headache.

Experienced and Republican

THE senate, over which Klamath's Marshall Cornett will preside, has 29 members with previous legislative experience, and one without. In the house, where Klamath's Henry Semon is one of the oldest members in point of service, only 12 of the 60 members are without previous legislative service.

Mr. Semon, incidentally, is one of only two democrats in the lower house. The other is Manley J. Wilson, St. Helen's, rated as the only real labor spokesman in the entire legislature. The senate has five democrats. This one-sided party line-up, however, is not as significant as it may seem to the observer. Party issues are not of great importance in the Oregon legislatures, and there are many shades of republicans there.

Issues

LET'S take a quick look at some of the issues likely to arise:

TAXES—The legislature will consider recommendations of the tax study committee for a business tax, stiffer income levies, more tax money from liquor and racing. The sales tax question might come to the front as the legislators hunt for funds to pay more money to state employees (including the state policemen); to meet the people's mandate for a $15,000,000 annual distribution for schools; and so on.

LABOR—An anti-closed shop amendment may be referred to the people. Other labor bills, designed to restrict the activities of unions or to compel them to assume financial and contractual responsibility, will undoubtedly come before the legislature. Labor, not strong in the legislature, may force referenda on measures it fears.

LIQUOR—Attempts to liberalize liquor laws, such as a scheme to permit liquor sales by the drink, may be expected. There is a plan on foot to have liquor revenue put into the general fund, rather than using it directly to pay old age pensions. Tigher liquor regulations may also be proposed.

SCHOOLS—Teachers will ask for a minimum annual salary of $2400 a year. There will be an argument over the method of distribution of the basic school fund which the people authorized at the last balloting.

MISCELLANY—Limited access roads, finan-ing the Marine Barracks vocation educational project, attempts to curb chain banks, bigger benefits for veterans, liberalization of unemployment compensation, restrictions on PUD elections, bigger old age pensions, a state forestry program, and that ancient ruckus between commercial and sports fishermen, are just a few of the miscellaneous items on the tentative legislative agenda.

We have run quickly over the list with the idea of informing our readers of things likely to come up which affect them directly. They might as well know, so they can get their word in to our legislators in time. The Klamath delegation is going to have plenty to do, but part of its job is to consider the opinion of constituents, and we give you the names and addresses of our representatives:

Senator Marshall Cornett, State Senate, Salem, Ore.
Representative Henry Semon, House of Representatives, Salem, Ore.
Representative Rose Poole, House of Representatives, Salem, Ore.

The World Today

By DeWITT MacKENZIE
Associated Press Foreign Affairs Analyst
NEWS ITEM—The reported romance between England's charming young Princess Elizabeth and handsome Prince Philip of Greece has become the subject of political controversy in Britain.

News item—Field Marshal Montgomery, England's famous soldier, has been feted in Moscow, and the Soviet press is paying tribute to him as one of the world's outstanding commanders.

"And what," demands a reader, "is the relationship—if any—between Elizabeth's romance and Italy's lionization in the red capital? It sounds like a sad mixture of shoes—and ships—and sealing wax—of cabbages—and kings." Well, that's a fair question, and maybe we shouldn't tackle such a riddle. Still, there's a very definite association of ideas, and when we have made this clear we shall have uncovered a highly significant political development. We may well start with some queries propounded a few days ago by the London newspaper "Pictorial":

Russ Reaction

WHAT will be Russia's reaction to Elizabeth's engagement to a prince whose identification and origin will scarcely be disguised by formal British citizenship? Or is the Russian reaction to such a personal matter of no real concern?

That's it: What will Russia think? Poor Elizabeth and Philip! Why should Moscow be concerned with an affair of heart between two youngsters who are just starting out in life and have had no hand in international affairs?

The answer lies in the fact that the prince is a Greek—and the Russian bear is claws-down on Greece. So are the little bears—Yugoslavia, Albania and Bulgaria. Indeed, Greece claims that these northern neighbors are to all intents making war against her.

Because of this situation, the left wing of the British socialist (labor) party is uneasy about the possibility of the prince marrying into the British royal family. This left wing has been urging the government to re-orient its foreign policy so as to bring Britain and Russia closer together, and thus dissipate Moscow's belief that England and America are ganging up on the Soviet Union.

That completes our circle and brings us back to Monty. Observers generally regard his visit to the Soviet capital as a diplomatic mission of good will, and the warmth of his reception would seem to be an indication of the measure of his success.

There is no reason to assume that England contemplates any change in the close relationship with the United States. However, this British move is vastly interesting, not only from the international standpoint but from that of political trends within the British Isles themselves.

Gra-Y Club Plans Talked

Klamath County YMCA Secretary, Cecil L. Kollenborn announced that the sponsoring committee, which met last night, made plans for expanding the program of the Spitfire Gra-Y club.

Hugh Estes, the club leader, assisted by members of the sponsoring committee, will be at the Conger school gymnasium Tuesday, January 14, from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m. to accept applications for membership to the club. Boys from the third, fourth and fifth grades may apply for membership but must be accompanied by a parent or guardian at their first meeting to sign the statement of approval.

Members of the sponsoring committee who will help direct the activities of the club are Carl Williams, president; H. A. R. By Bechen, vice president; Mrs. Bechen, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. Herbert Buker, Filas H. Kirkpatrick, Mrs. Filas Kirkpatrick and Mrs. E. O. Lozar.

Records Show Lone Hanging For Crime In This County

Theodore Jordan, a negro, was sentenced to hang February 3, 1933, for the murder of F. T. Sullivan, an SF dining car steward, but his sentence was reduced to life imprisonment by Governor Julius Meier.

Such organizations as the American Civil Liberties committee and others were active at that time, and it was their pressure on Governor Meier which won Jordan his commutation. Jordan is still in prison.

According to courthouse memories there was an Indian in the state jail some time before the state took over the job of execution in 1903, under sentence to hang. While the scaffold was being built he died in jail.

Captain Jack, the Modoc Indian leader, with three other Indians named Schonchin, Black Jim and Boston Charley, were hanged at Fort Klamath October 3, 1873, for their part in the assassination of Gen. E. R. S. Canby and Rev. Eleazer Thomas, peace commission members, in the Lava Beds country on April 11 of the year.

Faulder was the victim of the only Klamath county execution sentence since that time, as far as any available records show.

Peacetime Farming Trend To Be Discussed At Meet

The county agricultural planning conference to be held in Klamath county on February 26 is no crystal gazing session, but it will bring out some of the factors affecting the future of agriculture in this county. That was the comment of County Agent C. A. Henderson this week as he reviewed the work of committees that are making preparations for the county-wide planning day.

After record years of wartime production, the farms of Oregon are shifting to a peacetime basis, and farmers generally are wondering what changes should be made in their production plans. Basically, the situation still is the same as in the prewar years, the agent stated. Oregon must market a large amount of its crops and livestock products outside the state. The domestic market probably will be much more important than foreign outlets, and the volume of industrial employment and trade policies will have a great bearing on the domestic market. The big job, the agent stated, is to do the best job of farming we can on the individual farms and to channel our production along the lines that seem best able to meet competition from other regions in out-of-state markets.

The object of the farm conference is to analyze the situation and trends in each of the commodities which the farms of this area produce is also to recommend further development where opportunities exist for improving farm income. The session will be particularly helpful to farmers who have come to the county during the wartime period and to veterans who have recently started farming, the agent observed.

Similar planning sessions in earlier years have resulted in major developments in the agriculture of the state. One example is the production of grass and legume seed, which has skyrocketed from approximately 2500 acres in 1920 to more than 450,000 acres in recent years. Now there is intense interest in the peacetime market for these seeds, and also in the relative stability of these crops as compared with forage acreage for livestock production.

Also under consideration are livestock and dairy problems, farm management plans, soil conservation and the use of fertilizers, and means for improving farm living conditions and the opportunities for rural youth.

Committees that are drafting reports to be presented at the county session are working under the leadership of E. A. Geary, chairman of the county agricultural planning committee. Included are the following committee chairmen:

Land use committee, Harry Jackman, Malin; livestock committee, William Marshall, Olen; poultry committee, Stanley Soran, Klamath Falls; cross committee, John Kerns, Keno; small seeds committee, Dave McComb, Henley; youth committee, Rex High, Olen; labor and housing committee, Scott Warren, Algoma; home and rural life committee, Mrs. Harry Mitchell, Tulelake; dairy committee is a sub-committee of livestock.

Other committees that have not yet selected chairmen are potato, home garden, horticulture and part-time farming committees.

Following is the tentative program for one-day county agricultural planning conferences:

10:00 a. m., Outline of plan of conference and opening statement by chairman.
10:15 a. m., "The County's Agriculture," and "Some Major Problems," by the county agent, using county income charts.

10:30 a. m., Livestock committee report.
10:50 a. m., Farm crops committee report.

11:20 a. m., Farm home and rural life.
11:45 a. m., "Opportunities for Improvement in Rural Life," by central extension staff representative in home economics.

12:00-1:30 p. m. Simple noon luncheon (coffee, salad, sandwich) sponsored by chamber of commerce or other civic group, if possible, with music and other appropriate entertainment.

1:30 p. m., Land use committee report.
1:55 p. m., Dairy committee report.
2:20 p. m., Horticulture committee report: (a) Three fruits and nuts, (b) Small fruits, truck and cannerly crops.

2:45 p. m., Soil conservation, irrigation and drainage report.
3:10 p. m., "The 1947 Agricultural Outlook," by central extension staff representative.
3:35-4:00 p. m., Adjourn.

Fishing Fleet Ships Built

ASTORIA, Jan. 11 (AP)—The first of two ships being constructed to take part in fishing explorations with the Pacific Explorer is on the ways here and will be launched next week, the Astoria Marine Construction company reported today.

Both the ships when completed will join the Pacific Explorer, now on way to the coast of Mexico to engage in scientific and commercial fishing studies.

The 100-foot combination tuna clipper and trawler Oregon will be ready in several weeks to join the Pacific fishing expedition, the company said.

A twin vessel, the Washington, will be launched next month.

The local office of the exploration company has not received word from the Pacific Explorer since she sailed last Saturday.

Alaska Storm Dying Down

SEATTLE, Jan. 11 (AP)—The weather bureau said today the vast storm that was whipping the western Alaska seacoast overnight began to subside early Friday morning and wind velocity was down to 24 miles per hour at Nome.

For six hours the coast was lashed by heavy winds from the third storm in a week. Wind velocities at Nome had been expected to reach 75 miles per hour during the night, but at 4 a. m. (PST) were down to 47 miles an hour and had dropped to 24 two hours later.
