Truck Firms Dissatisfied With Deal

Truck operators today indicated in a statement to The Herald and News that the 11:30 a. m. parking proposal does not alleviate their parking troubles and they intend to advise the city council of their opinion.

The council's proposition is "definitely not the answer," said Charles F. Bane, manager of the Bend-Portland truck service. "What the truckers are asking for is a place to park their trucks for the purpose of loading and unloading merchandise," he said. "That is what we originally asked for and so far there is no more space in the downtown area than before."

At a meeting January 27, a group of truckers and merchants asked the city council to either establish loading zones for the use of trucks, or allow double parking. The council answered the request by allowing trucks to park anywhere in the downtown area without restriction before 11:30 each morning, but limiting any one company to a maximum of two trucks after that time, one for pick-up work, the other for delivery.

The truckers' principal complaint was that their trucks would not fit into a regular parking space, and it was difficult to find two parking spaces together near any certain point of delivery.

Bane stated that the truckers were not particularly looking for a way to escape paying the meters, what they wanted were places to park while operating. He pointed out that the truckers' slack season is now and if truckers are having difficulty, they must expect much worse conditions later unless something is done about it.

Don Sloan of the Sloan company stated that the proposal "sidestepped the truckers' problem entirely." He added that a properly policed series of loading zones was the only practical solution to the problem. In reference to Mayor Ostendorf's remark that the public was generally opposed to loading zones, both Bane and Sloan stated that the public should be educated and advised of the necessity for trucks to have easy access to business establishments.

Dimes Drive Still Short

The March of Dimes drive, still short of Klamath county's aim, has been continued this week to include the basketball game set for Saturday, Feb. 8. Ashley Chevrolet will play Oregon Frosh in the KUHS gym at 8:30 p. m. Saturday and the entire proceeds will go to the fight against infantile paralysis.

Collection cans will be left in downtown business houses this week for the convenience of those who still may want to contribute to the cause. Response from outlying communities in the drive has been very commendable, Mrs. Backes said, with little Sprague River turning in $95, proceeds from its basketball game. Bly community collected over $200 for the cause.

Schools are also to be commended for an excellent job, the chairman stated. The report just received from Shasta school shows $94 contributed by the 339 pupils enrolled.

The drive will definitely be concluded February 8. By that date all communities and schools should have their reports in, dime containers will be picked up and contents counted.

Total contribution for the drive from Klamath county will be announced the early part of next week.
