

Blessed Event For Park Bears Expected This Week

By RUTH KING
It may be a Valentine for Maggie and Jiggs, Moore park bears who are anticipating a blessed event, probably the last of this week. Both were in retirement Sunday and made no comment on the prospect, although B. F. Stott, park caretaker, says they have not hibernated this winter. This will be the second arrival for the two bears, who are brother and sister. Their first, born soon after they were brought to the park in 1934, was liberated in nearby mountains when he was a coming two-year old. At that time it became evident he no longer was welcome as a member of the household. Maggie and Jiggs have a bit of history behind them. They were captured by a forest ranger in the McKenzie pass country in 1931, and later became the property of D. E. Alexander, Klamath county stockman. Since there was doubt about their biological status the two were called Amos and Andy. Later Andy became Annie. They had built for them at Tomahawk tavern on the west side of Upper Klamath lake a modern concrete and log home with running water and wire-enclosed pen. They ate good food, greeted visitors who fed them taffy and other tidbits with bearlike affability and gambled like kittens to amuse themselves. Annie had one taste of the big outside world when she escaped from her pen to make "hash" of the caretaker's home. The building was empty except for two "young fry" of the Alexander family napping in a bedroom. Annie entered through a kitchen door, put the springs in the fireplace and tried the ashtray before the living room. The children, hearing "first a high note and then a low note," peeped from a door to see her trying out her octaves from the piano bench. Mending baskets got in her way. She tried the springs in the davenport. The bed wasn't made to suit her and she overhauled that with no little damage to blankets and the mattress. Before she was discovered she had found her image in a dressing table mirror and from the telltale evidence she liked what she saw.

When the tavern closed, Amos and Annie went to Moore park, via farm truck, to become Maggie and Jiggs. Their life there is devoted to their admiring public. Jiggs has learned to scatter too many on-lookers with a quick splash in the stream where they drink and bathe but beyond this occasional interlude they just eat and drowse.

CAFÉ OWNER SUES POLICE OFFICERS
PORTLAND, Feb. 13 (AP)—Conrad A. Johnson, a Portland café owner, sued eight policemen for $70,000 damages today, declaring they disrupted his business because of a personal grudge against him. Johnson asserted that for three days in September the men drove police cars over the sidewalk before his café, jostled patrons, and told customers "to stay out of the joint."
