

What Books Would You Take Along?

It was one of those afternoons in the newsroom when the press had stopped its thunder and the sellers were already screaming their wares as they left the back alley, that the staff started arguing among themselves on "the 10 best books to take on a desert island." This choice, of course, based on the condition that you were going to be on the island for a long, long time and by yourself. None of us smart enough, however, to choose the Boy Scouts handbook.

Finally we called up Lucile O'Neill and asked her advice. Here is what she had to say: "Although this island sojourn would provide an admirable opportunity to catch up on all the neglected subjects one has always intended to study, books intended for such a purpose are omitted, as each individual would want to select his own French grammar or geology text on whatever his heart desired. This would also apply to the masterpiece that everyone intends to write sometime, so let the reader include a dictionary or thesaurus if he so wishes.

"Horse sense would dictate that Book No. 1 would be an all-inclusive text on raft building, signaling, making fires, animals, first aid, establishing, identifying edible plants and social relations with cannibals, and all that sort of thing. Aside from this the following list is based simply on one person's likes and dislikes, with no pretense of scholarship or balance:

And here is the list: The Bible, Shakespeare's complete works, an anthology of British poetry, and some of American, Thackeray's Vanity Fair, his Henry Esmond, Dickens' Tale of Two Cities and/or David Copperfield, Sandburg's Abraham Lincoln, fudging, because "The Prairie Years" comes in two volumes and "The War Years" in three or four; Hugo's Les Miserables, Mark Twain's Little Women, Cather's Death Comes for the Archbishop, Browne's This Believing World, Marshall's Benjamin Blake, written by Mrs. O'Neill's brother, and the latest catalogue from Sears as suggested by Elinor Ehlers who thinks it would help to pass away many long hours and to keep in mental touch with civilization.

Hale Scarborough, our sports editor, has a list all his own. Here it is: Forever Amber, Windsor: Barefoot Boy With Cheek, Max Shulman; Feather Merchants, Shulman; Sad Sack, George Baker; Forever Amber, (in case the first volume wears out); Gone With the Wind, Mitchell; Complete Works of O. Henry, Porter; The Prudential Judge, V. Kester; Collected Poems, Service; Forever Amber, Windsor, (in case both other volumes wear out).

Hager
Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. J. Lanalin, who have a baby girl born February 9. Mrs. Lanalin is the former Ruth Golden of this community.

Martin Snyder was quite ill Tuesday and unable to attend school. The side roads are getting very muddy now.

Guy Gallette arrived home from Fort Lewis, Wash., where he received his discharge from the army last week. He was in the eastern war zone.

Bruce Hess plans to leave for Lovelock, Nev., as soon as the basketball season is over. The final games will be played this week-end. Bruce is a graduate of Henley high.

Miss Netta Joan Beddis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Beddis of Gloucestershire, England, became the bride of Wallace G. Britton, son of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Britton of Midland, in a ceremony read at the First Methodist church in Reno, Nev., on January 29. Mr. Britton met Miss Beddis in England while stationed there with the armed forces.

The bride was lovely in a dark blue suit with black accessories, her dainty hat was darker blue trimmed with ostrich feathers. Her corsage was gardenias and pink rose buds.

Mr. and Mrs. Britton will make their home in Midland district where he is engaged in the dairy business. He was a former resident of Hager and the Henley district several years ago.

Mrs. Britton came over on the Queen Elizabeth a few weeks ago. Mrs. James Crawford and small son came home a few days ago from the hospital. Mrs. Fleming is caring for them here now.

Howard Manning was a caller here Sunday. Several of the teen-age boys from here went toboggan riding Saturday at Moore park and report a fine time.

AIR TRAINING
