

Tradition Shattering Move By British Would Put Two Million Men On Night Shift

LONDON, Feb. 27 (AP)—Britain's tradition-shattering decision to introduce the night shift in British industry was expected today to confront the labor government with one of the toughest tests it has faced in its 19 months in power.

The government's plan to inaugurate night working shifts—which have been resisted bitterly for many years by British trade unions forming the backbone of the government's support—was announced in the house of commons last night during debate on the grave coal and power crisis which has closed many industrial plants and brought discomfort to the whole nation.

Sir Stafford Cripps, president of the board of trade, said the program for putting approximately 2,500,000 Britons on night duty would be devised by "agreement with the workers," and added: "There is really no other solution" for the current crisis.

He did not elaborate as to when the step would become effective, but presumably no definite action can be taken until the government's joint consultative committee of employers and unionists, headed by Labor Minister George Isaacs, gets recommendations from regional industrial boards some time next month.

The joint committee itself is in recess until March 13, pending receipt of these recommendations.

First responses to the night shift idea from industrial areas were mixed. Meetings of industrial groups at Derby and Northampton opposed night shifts, on the ground they would not spread the electric load effectively and would raise problems of transporting and feeding workers at odd hours.

On the other hand, representatives of workers and employers at Nottingham and Luton laid plans to begin night shifts next week without waiting for detailed government directives.

Marine Ace Urges Jap Aid

HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 27 (AP)—In the opinion of Gregory W. (Pappy) Boyington, the marine corps' top ace of the Pacific war and a long-time Japanese prisoner, "we should do all we can to give the Japanese people every break."

Boyington, in a talk last night to the Marine Newsmen's club, told his listeners that while prison food was scanty, Japanese soldiers were little if any better off and asserted "Japan will prove to be one of our most valuable assets."

"The Japanese are industrious people. They think in the American way. Japan, if allowed to go our way, will prove very valuable in the next war when it comes. And it is not far off."
